Paragraph 624(e) requires the FBI, subject to the availability of appropriations, to pay to the consumer reporting agency assembling or providing credit records a fee in accordance with FCRA procedures for reimbursement for costs reasonably necessary and which have been directly incurred in searching for, reproducing, or transporting books, papers, records, or other data required or requested to be produced under section 624. The FBI informs the Committee that such reports are commercially available for approximately $7 to $25 and that FBI could expect to pay fees in approximately that range. FBI officials have advised the conferees that the costs of such reports would be easily recouped from the savings afforded by the reduced need for other investigative techniques aimed at obtaining the same information.

Paragraph 624(f) prohibits the FBI from disseminating information obtained pursuant to section 624 outside the FBI, except as may be necessary for the approval of conduct of a foreign counterintelligence investigation, or, where the information concerns military service personnel subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice, to appropriate investigation authorities in the military department concerned as may be necessary for the conduct of a joint foreign counterintelligence investigation with the FBI. Since the military departments have concurrent jurisdiction to investigate and prosecute military personnel subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice, paragraph 624(g) permits the FBI to disseminate consumer credit reports it obtains pursuant to this section to appropriate military investigative authorities where a foreign counterintelligence investigation involves a military service person and is being conducted jointly with the FBI.

Paragraph 624(g) provides that nothing in section 624 shall be construed to prohibit information from being furnished by the FBI pursuant to subpoena or court order, or in connection with judicial or administrative proceeding to enforce the provisions of the FCRA. The paragraph further provides that nothing in section 624 shall be construed to authorize or permit the withholding of information from the Congress.

Paragraph 634(h) provides that on a semiannual basis the Attorney General shall fully inform the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and the Committee on Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs of the U.S. House of Representatives, and the Select Committee on Intelligence and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the U.S. Senate concerning all requests made pursuant to section 624.

Semiannual reports are required to be submitted to the intelligence committees on (1) use of FBI's mandatory access provision of the RFPA by section 3414(a)(5)(C) of title 15, United States Code; and (2) use of the FBI's counterintelligence authority, under the Electronic Privacy Communications Act of 1986, to access telephone subscriber and toll billing information by section 2709(e) of title 18, United States Code. The conferees expect the reports required by FCRA paragraph 624(h) to match the level of detail included in these reports, i.e., a breakdown by quarter, by number of requests, by number or persons or organizations subject to requests, and by U.S. persons and organizations and non-U.S. persons and organizations.

Paragraphs 624(i) through 624(m) parallel the enforcement provisions of the Right to Financial Privacy Act, 12 U.S.C. 3417 and 3418.

Paragraph 624(i) establishes civil penalties for access or disclosure by an agency or department of the United States in violation of section 624. Damages, costs and attorney fees would be awarded to the person to whom the consumer reports related in the event of a violation.

Paragraph 624(j) provides that whenever a court determines that any agency or department of the United States has violated any provision of section 624 and that the circumstances surrounding the violation raise questions of whether an officer or employee of the agency or department acted willfully or intentionally with respect to the violation, the agency or department shall promptly initiate a proceeding to determine whether disciplinary action is warranted against the officer or employee who was responsible for the violation.

Paragraph 624(k) provides that any credit reporting institution or agent or employee thereof making a disclosure of credit records pursuant to section 624 in good-faith reliance upon a certificate by the FBI pursuant to the provisions of section 624 shall not be liable to any person for such disclosure under title 15, the constitution of any State, or any law or regulation of any State or any political subdivision of any State.

Paragraph 624(l) provides that the remedies and sanctions set forth in section 624 shall be the only judicial remedies and sanctions for violations of the section.

Paragraph 624(m) provides that in addition to any other remedy contained in section 624, injunctive relief shall be available to require that the procedures of the section are compiled with and that in the event of any successful action, costs together with reasonable attorney's fees, as determined by the court, may be recovered.

Section 601 is identical to section 601 of the Senate amendment. The House bill did not contain a similar provision.

TITLE VII—TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

SEC. 701. CLARIFICATION WITH RESPECT TO PAY FOR DIRECTOR OR DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE APPOINTED FROM COMMISSIONED OFFICERS OF THE ARMED FORCES.

Section 701 of the conference report amends section 102(c)(3)(C) of the National Security Act of 1947 to make clear that a retired military officer appointed as Director or Deputy Director of Central Intelligence can receive compensation at the appropriate level of the Executive Schedule under 5 U.S.C. §5313 (Director) or 5 U.S.C. §5314 (Deputy Director). This was clearly the intent of the drafters of this provision. The conferees are aware of the restriction on compensation that applies to active duty military personnel appointed as DCI or DDCI, and in no way wish to change this restriction. Section 701 is similar to Section 601 in the House bill and Section 701 in the Senate amendment.

SEC. 702. CHANGE OF DESIGNATION OF CIA OFFICE OF SECURITY.

Section 702 of the conference report amends the CIA Information Act of 1984 to reflect the recent reorganization of the CIA Office of Security into the Office of Personnel Security and the Office of Security Operations. The amendment will ensure that the Office of Personnel Security, where the records intended to be subject to the Act are kept, will continue to receive the benefit of the Act's exception from search and review under the Freedom of Information Act. Section 701 is similar to Section 602 in the House bill and Section 702 in the Senate amendment.

PROVISIONS NOT INCLUDED IN THE CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate amendment included, at Section 404, a requirement for an annual report on liaison relationships. While the Conferees are committed to ensuring that the oversight committees are appropriately informed on liaison relationships, they do not believe that a statutory reporting requirement is the best way to achieve that result. Consequently, the conferees agreed to delete section 404.

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1966—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 104-149)

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the further consideration of the veto of the President on the bill (H.R. 2076) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1996, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. ROGERS

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROGERS moves that the message, together with the accompanying bill, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROGERS] is recognized for 1 hour.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and that I be allowed to include tabular and extraneous material on H.R. 2076.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. MOLLOHAN] for the purposes of debate only, and I yield back 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is a sad day today, after the President has vetoed the largest crime fighting budget in the Nation's history, just one day after the FBI announced that crime rates are finally starting to drop. It is a sad day today, when all of the Federal employees in the Departments of Justice, State, and Commerce, the Federal Courts, and 20 related agencies, more than 200,000 of them, have their jobs left in doubt because the President refused to sign the full year appropriation for them.

Two-thirds of the funding in this bill, Mr. Speaker, nearly $18 billion, would have gone to putting criminals behind bars.

Think about the programs that will not go into effect because of this veto: $14.6 billion for law enforcement, a 19-percent increase, including $3.6 billion for State and local law enforcement to give them the resources to fight crime where it counts, on our streets. That is a 57-percent increase over last year.

An $895 million increase to combat illegal immigration and secure the Nation's borders; $146 million more than the President requested, including 3,000 more INS personnel and 1,000 more border patrols on the border. We need to get these people hired and trained. Otherwise the money will be wasted.

The bill includes $500 million for California, Texas, Florida, New York, and other States most impacted by criminal aliens, and the President is telling those States, "tough luck."

In the bill vetoed is also $175 million for violence against women programs, 7 times more than we provided this year, the full amount of the President's request. Now he is vetoing the money for violence against women.

On October 15, the President accused the Congress of reducing domestic violence programs by $50 million, hampering "our efforts to protect battered women and their children, to preserve families, and to punish those crimes."

Well, Mr. Speaker, that $50 million is included in this conference report, plus $125 million more. We fully fund the program. And what does the President do? He says "no."

Why is he vetoing the bill? He says we do not spend enough money on some programs. Even while he is meeting now to reduce spending, he wants us to include and increase spending for things like the Ounce of Prevention Council, $2 million; the Globe Program, $7 million. Great international organizations he wants money spent for, and among the reasons he vetoed the bill, are things like the Bureau of International Expositions; and, get this one, the International Office of Epizootics.

That is why he says he is vetoing the bill, and for corporate welfare programs he says we did not fund, like the Advanced Technology Program. That is corporate welfare. I think we were all determined to cut it and we did in this bill. And he is vetoing the bill, he says, because of his pique over the COPS Program. As we have said so many times, this is not a debate over putting more police on the streets. The conference report fully funds the request of $1.9 billion, giving our local communities the resources to hire every single policeman on the beat that the President proposed, and then some, as the President says. The difference is over who controls the program. Is it a Washington-based, one-size-fits-all program, that the President wants; or do we empower local communities to decide what they need most to fight crime?

We have heard the problems with the President's COPS Program. According to the General Accounting Office, 50 percent of the communities do not participate because they cannot afford to participate. It costs them 25 percent of the total cost the first year; more in the second; and after that, they are entirely on their own. They simply cannot afford it.

What we do in our program is make them put up 10 percent, and they can use the money for cops, if they want, or for cop cars, if they need that, or for other things.

COPS is a discretionary grant program, so communities cannot predict whether they will receive funds or not. And the COPS Program that the President wants, and here is the rub, requires a whole brand new Washington bureaucracy. In fiscal 1996, 236 positions; $26 million. They have rented a 10-floor, 51,000 square foot building where the rent alone costs $1.5 million.

The block grant program, which we put in the bill, corrects all of those problems, but the President objects because Washington knows best.

So for those reasons, not spending enough on lower priority programs, a dispute over who gets credit for putting more police on the streets, the President has vetoed the bill, the biggest crime fighting appropriation in the Nation's history, putting at risk the jobs of some 200,000 Federal employees.

I wish the President would get over this pique, this political pique. We are not asking him to vacate Air Force One by the rear door. All we are saying is sign this bill; we sent you a good one.

Every day these crime fighting funds are delayed because of the President's veto is a day wasted in the fight against violent crime, drugs, illegal immigration, and violence against women.

I regret the President's veto. I regret the fact that the White House never saw fit to sit down with us to try to work out an acceptable bill. I regret the fact that 200,000 Federal employees continue to be at risk of furloughs because the President puts his priorities ahead of theirs.

But the bill has been vetoed. The only alternative we have, Mr. Speaker, is to send the bill back to the committee and start the process over. Congress did its job on this bill. It passed the appropriations for Commerce, Justice, State, the Federal Judiciary, and others for fiscal 1996.

There is no bill in place now, not because the Congress did not act, it is purely because the President acted to kill a bill that would have funded the greatest crime fighting era ever in the Nation's history.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the President has vetoed the fiscal year 1996 Commerce, Justice, State and Judiciary and related agencies appropriations bill. As everyone knows, this is the third appropriations bill the President has vetoed this week, and his action on this bill is not unexpected. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it is anything but unexpected.

When the Commerce, Justice, State and Judiciary conference report was on the floor 2 weeks ago, it was clear that the President was going to veto it. In fact, when this bill passed the House in July, the President clearly indicated that he would veto any version of the bill that did not fund the Cops on the Beat Program in its already-authorized last-year form.

The President has, from the beginning of this process this year, indicated his priorities for the bill, and the bill Congress sent to him does not fund those priorities.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a perfunctory motion we debate this afternoon. It is absolutely perfunctory. We should not even be here debating this motion to send this bill back to the committee. We ought to be debating a continuing resolution so that we can get the Government up and operating, so that we can get these agencies funded, so that we can get this COPS program funded.

Mr. Speaker, there are 8,000 additional community policemen, on top of the 26,000 that the President has already gotten out during the last year. There are 8,000 new cops that have been appointed, but they cannot be funded because this bill has not passed, or because we have not passed a continuing resolution while we debate the policy priorities that are contained in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, there is no reason, there is no reason that these Justice Department programs, that these crime-fighting initiatives that were started under President Clinton's program 2 years ago cannot now be funded. We could be operating under a continuing resolution. No reason why we could not be operating under a continuing resolution if we were not trying to use the appropriations process as leverage to bring the President to tow.

Now, that is what the majority is doing. They are saying, oh, we are not funding all of these crime-fighting programs because the President has vetoed this bill. This bill was supposed to be passed the 1st of October. This bill, and six other appropriations bills that are not passed, were supposed to be passed 3 months ago. They are not passed, and now we are sending it back to committee to try to rework the bill to accommodate the President's concerns. In the meantime, unless we pass a continuing resolution, which is what we ought to be debating here, unless we pass that continuing resolution, Mr. Speaker, these agencies are going to continue to be shut down.

The point is, we could be funding these programs right now if we were debating passing a CR and going forward, funding them while we debate these policy priorities and while we consider the reconciliation bill.

Mr. Speaker, let us move forward with the CR. The President was granted applications for 8,000 additional policemen to go into every community, every State, every congressional district across this Nation. Last year we appointed 26,000. We have 8,000 more ready to go as soon as this money is released. It can be released with a continuing resolution.

If the majority wants to debate the priorities, if it wants to debate block grants, fine, let us debate block grants. Let us debate priorities before this bill passes. Let us allow these policemen to get on the street by debating a CR, getting a CR out and passed so we can implement some of these crime-fighting programs that the majority alludes to.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON], the great chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank my great chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State and Judiciary for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, the President vetoed this bill, but it was no surprise to the President what was in this bill. He has known about this bill for 3 months, because it passed the House in July. The President has known the numbers that were in this bill since then.

He has known that this is a real crime bill; that this bill provides $14.6 billion to fight crime, which is 20 percent more than last year's level. He has known that it provides 25 percent more for immigration initiatives than last year's level, and 57 percent more for State and local law enforcement than last year's level, plus it gives State and local law enforcement officials more opportunity to determine where the money goes, and it requires less money up front from them than that COPS Program that we have heard so much about.

This bill gives States 285 percent more for State criminal alien assistance, and it includes 573 percent more for violence-against-women's programs. We have heard that there is a great need for violence against women's programs because of what battered women around this country are telling us. This bill answers their pleas. It answers their call. And the President crassly vetoed this bill yesterday, a few days before Christmas, right on the heels of his veto of the VA-HUD and Interior bills.

If he had not vetoed those 3 bills, 620,000 Federal employees would be employed today without worry about whether or not they are going to get their paycheck at Christmas.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is a good bill, and it should have been signed, but the President could remedy this. He could come back with an overall comprehensive package that puts us on a balanced budget by the year 2002, that includes whatever extra funding that he may want, as long as he can find it in some other area in the entitlement programs. He can present to the American people the proposal that he can govern, that he can work with this Congress, if only he will sit down to the table with our negotiators. He has promised he would, he has promised he is for a 7-year balanced budget, as scored by CBO, but all we have heard is rhetoric.

When the President decides to get serious, this bill or some variation will be signed into law.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS], the ranking member.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the ranking member of the subcommittee for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, we are back to the bill that has come from the nicest subcommittee chairman in the Congress with the lousiest bill. Here we are again.

I guess the Republicans have to say I believe the President now. He told them in the summer; he told them in the fall; he told them when the bill was being debated, I will veto this bill. And the Republicans gave him their advice, which is their responsibility, and now he has vetoed the bill. They believe him now.

Now, where is the continuing resolution? I think the gentleman from West Virginia is absolutely correct. Look at what we are doing here, gentlemen. Over and above the COPS Program, we are eliminating the Drug Initiative Program. I am glad the chairman of the subcommittee saw fit not to mention it. It is on the first page of the veto, if he will take a look at it.

We are getting rid of or crippling the Legal Services Corporation, the program that would represent people who are indigent and cannot otherwise afford these services.

We have a rider in the bill that the gentleman did not mention, a moratorium on the Endangered Species Act, which has nothing whatsoever to do with the bill. I guess the gentleman does not know where that one came from.

□ 1245

So, I would suggest to my colleagues that this is a very serious veto, well anticipated. We knew it was coming. Why they would want to take away the Death Penalty Resource Center out of the legal services programs, I do not know.

Mr. Speaker, when race relationships are at an all-time high in terms of misunderstanding, what do they do with the Community Relations Service in the Department of Justice? Wipe it out.

Now, we come to the floor belaboring the fact that the President did precisely what he said he was going to do. Do not be ashamed. Look, my colleagues have been there before. They have done it all summer. I still say that the chairman of the appropriations subcommittee here is still one of the nicest guys in the Congress, with the lousiest bills that ever come to the floor.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I should thank the gentleman or not; at least a half a thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA].

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, today the lives of women and children are in great danger. I must remind my colleagues that the Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations Act contains critical funding for the Violence Against Women Act, legislation that has had the overwhelming support of the Congress and the President.

Without these monies, we will not have desperately needed training programs for those who are on the frontlines—our police and judges—in fighting domestic violence, rape, and other crimes against women.

We will not have the funds to strengthen efforts in our local communities by our local law enforcement agencies and by our prosecutors to combat violent crimes against women. States and local government cannot do this work without the funds in VAWA.

We will not have the funds to pay for victims services for women and children who are in danger and in desperate circumstances.

In short, the progress we have made in the struggle to end domestic violence and violent crimes against women is in jeopardy. Our States are depending on these funds to proceed with much needed programs in our communities all across our country.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot allow the women and children of this country to be caught up in the crossfire of the budget battles.

We cannot leave this House without ensuring that we stand firm on our commitment to the women and families of this Nation. We must reach agreement on this vital spending bill. The women and children of this country are depending on us.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to myself, and I would like to ask the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA] if she would engage me in a colloquy.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentlewoman, she was not intending to imply that because the President vetoed this bill that was sent to him almost 2 months after the time it was supposed to be sent to him, that, for example, the money that is in here, the $175 million for the violence against women will not be funded. The gentlewoman is not suggesting that, is she?

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield, we just cannot tell. Right now, it is in total jeopardy.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, how is it in jeopardy? This bill is going to come back to committee. No matter what happens to this bill, for my part and the majority's part, no matter what happens to this bill, that money is going to be there.

The President was very supportive of this. That was in his request. The violence against women money will be in there. We should not be scaring people out there and suggesting that that money is not going to be there because the President vetoed the bill. The President vetoed the bill for a lot of policy reasons. That money will be there, and we ought not attempt to scare people.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would continue to yield, there are a lot of promises and assumptions that we feel in this legislative arena and we find out that may not happen. We want to be assured that it is signed so that we do have the money.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, again reclaiming my time, I hope I have given the gentlewoman a little assurance.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SKAGGS], a distinguished member of our committee.

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Speaker, why in the world are we here in the middle of December without this bill passed, with the Government shut down? All of this was supposed to have been out of the way by the first of October. And through no fault of the minority party, here we are.

Mr. Speaker, the majority simply does not know how to run the Congress on time, on schedule, to get our basic work done, our basic responsibilities taken care of.

In this instance, as in the case of so many of the appropriations bills, we are 2½ months late because the majority insisted on jamming a bunch of controversial policy matters into bills to deal with appropriations matters, where they have absolutely no business, and then getting hung up with the Senate when they could not get any agreement on how to do this.

Mr. Speaker, we wasted months on the contract. We are late in getting the appropriations bills done here. We are 2½ months into fiscal 1996, with the Government shut down, going through this drill.

We should be ashamed of ourselves. Any majority party that took seriously its basic responsibilities to run this place, to get our work done, would not be bringing a bill like this up now with the Government in chaos. We would be getting a continuing resolution done that at least acknowledged the failure of the majority party to be able to get its basic work accomplished on time.

Mr. Speaker, we stand ready to see a continuing resolution, to get this Government back on its feet promptly this week before Christmas. It is a shame that we are here in this kind of dysfunctional state of mind and state of inaction while the good men and women of this country, who have a right to expect more of their Government than this kind of behavior, sit out there looking at us aghast at our inability to get our basic responsibilities accomplished.

Mr. Speaker, let us dismiss this particular distraction; get back to appropriation bills that are true to the traditions of this place; get a continuing resolution through; and, get this Government on its feet.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Staten Island, NY [Ms. MOLINARI].

Ms. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my strong disappointment with President Clinton's veto of this bill. This bill included full funding for the Violence Against Women Act; $175 million to protect women and children from abuse. That is an increase of 573 percent from last year.

Mr. Speaker, regardless of why the President vetoed this bill, when he did, he canceled the implementation of this funding. In the next 5 minutes, 1 woman will be raped in America and 14 more will be beaten by their husbands and boyfriends. We need to start as soon as possible to get money and programs to our State and local governments for things such as law enforcement and prosecution grants; court appointed special advocate programs for victims of child abuse; training for judicial personnel and practitioners; $28 million to go for arrest policies to encourage local governments to deal with domestic violence as a serious criminal offense; $1.5 million for a national stalkers and domestic violence reduction program; $7 million for rural domestic and child abuse enforcement.

Mr. Speaker, these are terrible tragedies that are existing every minute throughout this country in every corner of this country. We can go a long way toward stopping this as soon as the President will not hold this funding program hostage to the veto of the Commerce bill. I hope that he sees the error of his ways and implements his cooperation to get this money to the States.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute to engage the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. MOLINARI].

Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman again suggests that money in here has been canceled for this program for the year. Is that what the gentlewoman is implying?

Ms. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield, I am sure I was clear to say that when the President vetoed this bill, he canceled the expenditure of these funds until he finds a bill that he wants to sign.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, but the gentlewoman is not suggesting that money will not be in this program once this bill is processed and signed by the President?

Ms. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, with all due respect, if the gentleman knows what the President has in his mind these days, he is smarter that the rest of America.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Reclaiming my time, will the gentlewoman acknowledge that she was engaged in a bipartisan effort to get this money in the bill, and it was supported by the President?

Ms. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would continue to yield, I appreciate the cooperation given from the Democratic side of the aisle in this funding. I am only sorry that the President did not enter into that spirit of cooperation.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman acknowledge that if we pass a continuing resolution here on this bill, that we would be able to immediately fund this program while we go forward and debate these other issues, and we could immediately fund it, get everybody back to work and get them back to work now and pass the rest of the programs and the violence against women programs? Does the gentlewoman agree with that?

Ms. MOLINARI. No, absolutely not.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. The gentlewoman does not agree that if we get a continuing resolution passed, we would be able to do that?

Ms. MOLINARI. At last year's level, which is a significant diminution of what we are appropriating in this Congress at 573 percent more this year. That is a tremendous difference.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Ms. DELAURO].

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, the issue today is not this motion that is before us which is being debated, but rather that we ought to be debating a continuing resolution so that we can keep this Government open and we can talk about the Commerce, State, and Justice bill, and the Cops on the Beat Program.

Mr. Speaker, let me make just one point in that the President in my view was correct to veto the Commerce, State and Justice bill for, particularly in my view, for the Cops on the Beat Program and dismantling it.

But the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. MOLINARI] and the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA] both know about the President's commitment to the Violence Against Women's Act, and that if we got this Government open and running, that that money would flow and the commitment is absolutely there.

Mr. Speaker, they were part of a bipartisan effort to put it together, and anything that they get up to say about it was partisan on the their part today.

Mr. Speaker, let me say that I strongly support what the President did on Commerce, State and Justice, specifically because I oppose dismantling the community policing initiative. It is a crime fighting program that has worked and one that we ought to continue, and it has lowered the crime rate in this Nation tremendously.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, as previous speakers have already indicated, the President indicated a long time ago that he was going to veto this bill, and he indicated that repeatedly because of his concern that this bill rips up his Cops on the Beat Program and a number of other concerns listed in the veto message. That is not the issue here today.

The program with what is happening here today is that we are debating a perfunctory motion to which absolutely no one is opposed. This motion is simply to send the bill to committee. Everybody is going to support that.

Mr. Speaker, instead of wasting time on this meaningless motion, what we ought to be doing, as the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. MOLLOHAN] has indicated, is bringing a clean continuing resolution to this floor to keep the Government open so that all programs, including these programs, can continue to function.

What is rally at stake here is exactly what the gentleman from West Virginia has indicated. What is happening is that the Republican leadership of this House is trying to gain leverage on their discussions with the President on the 7-year budget by shutting down Government and holding hostage all of these programs and all of the people running them until the President caves in to the demands of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. Speaker, what is at stake here was summed up by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in a press conference he held after President Clinton signed the defense bill. When the President signed the defense bill, my good friend, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON], then said as follows: "The President is at our mercy. If the Government shuts down on December 15 and 300,000 people are again out of work, most of the people going out will be his people. I think he's going to care more about that than we do."

Mr. Speaker, that is apparent today. It is very apparent that there is very little concern on the part of the majority party leadership for the individual workers in this country who are being crunched because of a power game between the White House and the Speaker of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the leverage games ought to stop. I know full well that if those leverage games were not going on, the subcommittee chairman of this subcommittee and the ranking Democrat could work out these differences in half an hour, because they are both good men. I know that would happen.

The fact is, this debate is a waste of time. For any of our citizens who happen to be watching it today, it is a sad day in my view because it once again demonstrates that we are mistaking motion for movement.

We should not be wasting our time on a meaningless motion like this.

I would urge the Speaker of the House to immediately bring a continuing resolution to the floor so that this charade can stop, so that Government can stay open, so that Government agencies can provide the services to which the taxpayers are entitled, and stop the political game.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM], the chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I want to say that I truly believe that there is probably no other illustration better than this bill today of the differences between Republicans and Democrats, fundamentally about our approach to government and fundamentally about the revolution that is taking place with the new majority. We are not doing business as usual, and some, I can understand it, on the other side of the aisle would like to see us do it the traditional way.

Yes, there is authorizing legislation that normally would come through the authorizing committee to the floor in this bill, and, yes, we are doing some major changes, different from what the President wants, and, yes, we know that we cannot succeed in some of these votes up and down with a straight ability to override a Presidential veto because we do not have the votes to do that.

But we are determined in our revolution this year in making the change to the new majority to do what the public wants us to do, and that is to make a difference, to really change the way we fight crime, among other things, and the way our Government responds to things.

What this bill does and what this legislation on crime fighting does is to do that. It, first of all, takes a program or two passed by the Democrats in the last Congress that provided Washington business-as-usual grants out there for more police officers and for all kinds of so-called prevention programs that governments would have to apply for and do it the way Washington said, takes all of those programs and rolls them into one single $10-billion grant program, block-grant program, for which local cities and counties would get the money to fight crime as they see fit. If they wanted to hire new policemen, they could. If they wanted to do a drug treatment program, they could. If they wanted to use that money for a new piece of equipment, they could do that. Whatever they wanted to do; what is good for Portland, OR, is not good for Charleston. One size does not fit all. That is a very big difference between Republicans and Democrats.

We do not believe Washington should be dictating how to fight crime or many other things to local governments. They ought to be making those decisions, and the President's veto is an indication he does not agree with us. He agrees with the typical business-as-usual liberal Democrats who like big government in Washington.

The second thing in this bill about fighting crime we seem to overlook that is very important, maybe more important in some ways than getting 100,000 cops and changing the way we do business around here and so on, is the fact that we have in this bill a change in the way we go about the incentive program for building new prisons to try to encourage States, if they meet the goal of requiring violent repeat offenders to serve at least 85 percent of their sentences, then they can get prison grant money. Many States are changing their laws to build these prisons. We have prisoners today getting out, serving only a third of their sentences and committing violent crimes over and over again.

We ought to take away the key and throw it away and do away with it.

The last piece in this bill is prison litigation reform. The President vetoed that, too. This bill should not have been vetoed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROGERS].

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS BE DISCHARGED FROM FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 131, FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATION, FISCAL YEAR 1996

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from further consideration of House Joint Resolution 131, which is a clean continuing resolution to extend the Government through January 26, authorize 2.4 percent military pay raise, effective January 1, eliminate 6-month disparity between COLA payment dates for military and civilian retirees in fiscal 1996, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the guidelines consistently issued by successive Speakers as recorded on page 534 of the House rules manual, the Chair is constrained not to entertain the gentleman's request until it has been cleared by the bipartisan floor and committee leaderships, and, therefore, it is not in order at this time.

Mr. OBEY. I hope it will soon be cleared.

WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2539, THE ICC TERMINATION ACT OF 1995

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 312 and ask for the immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 312

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 2539) to abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission, to amend subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code, to reform economic regulation of transportation, and for other purposes. All points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived. The conference report shall be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 312 allows for the consideration of the conference report to accompany H.R. 2539, the Interstate, Commerce Commission Termination Act of 1995. Under the rule, all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived, and the conference report shall be considered as read.

Mr. Speaker, although I do not generally favor granting blanket waivers, the Rules Committee was provided with a list of specific waivers required for consideration of this bill, and this rule was adopted by voice vote in the Rules Committee.

Also, there was discussion yesterday that the Senate might consider a concurrent resolution which would effectively amend this conference report to include the Whitfield amendment as passed by the House. I supported the Whitfield amendment when it was adopted by the House because it provided important protections for small and medium size railroad employees who lose their jobs because of a merger or acquisition. I think this language should have been retained without change in this conference report.

Unfortunately, the language of this concurrent resolution was unavailable to the Rules Committee, and the committee was unable to accommodate consideration of the concurrent resolution in this rule.

Mr. Speaker, funding for the ICC expires at the beginning of next year, and if we do not pass this conference report, the important functions of this agency that are being transferred to the Department of Transportation will fall by the wayside. This bill provides for an orderly termination and transfer of the vital functions of the ICC.

This is an important part of our efforts to downsize the Federal Government, and I urge adoption of the rule and the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume and I thank my colleague from Tennessee for yielding me the customary half hour.

Mr. Speaker, although this is a standard conference report rule, I am very much opposed to this bill.

Despite promises to the contrary, despite the House-passed compromise on November 14—this bill contains some serious antiworker provisions.

This bill takes away class 2 and class 3 railroad workers' right to collective bargaining. It will hurt thousands of hard working Americans and it is unfair.

Mr. Speaker, nearly every other American worker has the right to collective bargaining, including class 1 railroad workers, class 2 and class 3 railroad workers should have the same worker protection as everyone else.

But, Mr. Speaker, once again, my Republican colleagues are choosing employers over employees.

They are saying that hard-working railroad workers do not deserve the most basic worker protections. They are saying that rail carrier mergers are more important than people.

Thankfully, President Clinton has said he will veto this bill, and I think he should. My colleagues should have kept their word and rail workers should be able to keep their jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to oppose this rule. American workers deserve every protection we can give them.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR], ranking member of the committee.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, when the Committee on Rules met last night and our side testified at the meeting of the Committee on Rules, we asked for very few things. We asked that if points of order are going to be waived in this rule, that they be specified, that there be a specific reference to which points of order are to be waived in the interests of fairness and openness, and we asked that issues such as scope, germaneness, Budget Act problems, 3-day layover of conference reports issue be specified if there are going to be waivers of points of order.

The rule comes out with no specificity whatever. It just waives all points of order.

We also made a very modest request that if the Senate acted on a Senate concurrent resolution to restore the Whitfield amendment as a substitute for the language in the conference report dealing with labor protective provisions, that it be made in order for us to take up that Senate concurrent resolution. The Senate has not yet acted. It may not act on that concurrent resolution. But there is no provision in this rule as we requested. It was a modest request. I thought it was favorably received by the chairman of the Committee on Rules. But it is not included here as a mere courtesy to the Democrats.

This conference report is not a simple matter. This is 164 pages of very technical language dealing with a complex subject in the sunsetting of the oldest regulatory body in the Federal Government structure dealing with a mode of transportation that, in the 19th century, was the life line of America and all the way up through until the end of World War II was the cornerstone of our national economy, the railroad industry.

We are going to wipe it away. We have a bill with 164 pages of technical language. Points of order are simply waived. They do not say which ones. They do not give us the opportunity to bring up, should it be enacted, should it be passed by the Senate, the Senate concurrent resolution.

I find this very, very curious. I find it unpalatable. I find it inappropriate.

Nonetheless, I recognize that the other side has the votes. We will save our fight for the conference report.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the rule and the conference report when it is brought before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 558, TEXAS LOW-LEVEL RADIOACTIVE WASTE DISPOSAL COMPACT CONSENT ACT

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 313 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

H. RES. 313

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 558) to grant the consent of the Congress to the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Compact. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Commerce. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. Each section shall be considered as read. During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be printed in the portion of the Congressional Record designated for that purpose in clause 6 of rule XXIII. Amendments so printed shall be considered as read. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. McINNIS] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from California, [Mr. BEILENSON], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During the consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 313 is a very simple resolution. The proposed rule is an open rule providing for 1 hour of general debate divided equally between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Commerce. After general debate, the bill shall be considered as read for amendment under the 5 minute rule. The resolution allows the Chair to accord priority recognition to Members who have preprinted their amendments in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule provides one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, Mr. BLILEY, requested an open rule for this legislation. This open rule was reported out of the Committee on Rules by unanimous voice vote.

Mr. Speaker, earlier this year, I voted against this legislation under the suspension of the rules because I felt that this legislation should be thoroughly debated. Under the proposed rule, each Member has an opportunity to have their concerns addressed, debated, and ultimately voted up or down by this body. I urge my colleagues to support this rule, as well as the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I include the following data for the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BONILLA].

Mr. BONILLA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Compact Consent Act and the rule for the bill. As you all know this bill was considered by the House back in September. The House overwhelmingly defeated this bill by a vote on 243 to 176 under suspension of the rules.

I commend the Rules Committee for a job well done in developing this rule. It is an open and very fair rule, however, I believe this bill should not be coming to the floor for another vote. This rule would have been appropriate had the bill been considered in regular order back in September when it was first voted upon.

The House already made its statement loud and clear by rejecting this bill. This bill is not in order today and I urge my colleagues to oppose the bill and the rule.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MCINNIS] for yielding the customary 30 minutes of debate time to me.

Mr. Speaker, we support this open rule for H.R. 558, the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Compact Consent Act. The bill was defeated overwhelmingly by a vote of 176 to 243 in September when it was taken up on the suspension calendar, and the bill itself remains quite controversial.

In fact, we were surprised to see it placed on the schedule for today with such little notice. Members of the Committee on Rules were not notified until yesterday afternoon that it would be taken up by committee at 5:15 yesterday evening. We questioned the wisdom of considering this bill again, even under an open rule, at this time in the session. It is not at all clear that the most open procedure can solve the problems that the bill seems to have. The fact that the Texas delegation itself is split evenly on the bill, 15 Members voted for it and 15 against it when it was before us in September, should have been a sign to the leadership that the strong vote against the bill should, for the moment at least, be allowed to stand.

Nevertheless, we are here today considering this legislation when we should be putting all of our efforts and energy into passing the long-overdue annual appropriations bills that are crucial to returning Government services to the American people.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we support this rule. It is an open rule, but we remain disturbed that it is being taken up at all for legislation that has already been defeated by the House, as the gentleman from Texas just said, when we should be considering the spending legislation that is critical to ensuring that our citizens receive the Government services they deserve.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SCHAEFER] who is also chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. SCHAEFER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 313, the rule which accompanies H.R. 558, the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact Consent Act. This bill, introduced by our colleague, JACK FIELDS, will allow the States of Texas, Maine, and Vermont to join the other 42 States which have already entered into low-level radioactive waste disposal agreements.

The open rule, providing that debate on and possible amendments to H.R. 558 will allow for a broad range of issues to be discussed, is a welcome step. The measure had strong bipartisan support during the Commerce Committee's consideration of it, and I am hopeful that once Members have listened to this debate at the full House level, the bill will enjoy similar wide support on final passage.

Low-level wastes emit a low intensity of radioactivity. In fact, the vast majority of low-level wastes—97 percent—do not require any special shielding to protect workers or the surrounding community. Examples of these wastes range from the coverall uniforms used at nuclear power sites to the radioactive elements of a hospital x-ray machine.

Currently, 42 States are already involved in nine compact arrangements for the disposal of low-level waste. H.R. 558 would finally allow the States of Texas, Maine, and Vermont to begin their efforts to fully comply with the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act of 1980 and to join the other States which have already entered into such compacts.

One of the important and controversial matters raised during the House's first consideration of this bill revolved around the siting of the low-level waste facility. H.R. 558, like the other nine compacts before it, does not specify a site. It was the intent of Congress that siting, like the other responsibilities outlined in the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Act, would remain a State issue. Regardless of the site, the States of Texas, Maine, and Vermont need the congressional consent of this compact. And regardless of the compact, these States will have a need for low-level radioactive waste disposal capability. The facts are very clear.

An open rule will provide a good forum to debate these points. The rule is a good one and I urge the House's adoption.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BALDACCI].

Mr. BALDACCI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the rule on H.R. 558, the bill to give congressional consent to the Texas low-level radioactive waste disposal compact.

Many of my colleagues had opposed this bill when it came up under the Suspension Calendar, and I have talked to some of them about their vote. One of the reasons that they most frequently gave for their opposition was the lack of an opportunity to fully debate this question.

The Committee on Rules has recommended an open rule allowing for 1 hour of general debate. I fully expect a vigorous discussion on the compact. I look forward to that debate and to answering any questions that may arise.

The compact is important for Texas. It is important for Vermont, and it is important for Maine. This would be the 10th compact that Congress has ratified since 1985, when Congress enacted the low-level radioactive waste disposal policy amendments.

This was one of those unfunded mandates that Congress gave the States to develop methods of managing low-level nuclear waste. The three States have diligently complied with that mandate.

The Governors and the legislatures of Vermont and Texas have approved the compact. The Governor and legislature and people of Maine have approved the compact.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, since my good friend has allowed me such time as I may consume, I thought it was probably important to utilize this opportunity to discuss the low-level radioactive waste compact.

The measure before us today would give congressional approval to the compact between Maine, Vermont, and Texas for the disposal of low-level radioactive waste produced in those States.

Experience has probably taught all of us just how difficult waste management issues can become. And none is more difficult than those involving radioactive materials.

In 1985, after considerable debate, Congress enacted the low-level radioactive waste disposal policy amendments act. Congress gave responsibility to the States for the management of low-level radioactive waste. These materials are byproducts of nuclear medicine, nuclear research, industrial processes, as well as nuclear power generation.

Congress clearly gave the States a mandate, without funding I might add, to develop responsible methods for managing this waste. H.R. 558 would simply ratify the compact negotiated between Maine, Vermont, and Texas. It represents the last step in the process. These three States have diligently complied with the congressional mandate. H.R. 558 deserves our overwhelming support.

Congress, in dictating to the States and requiring the States to come up with these compacts, this is the 10th compact that Congress has approved since 1985—9 others involving 42 States have received speedy consent. It would be very irresponsible and also unfair if we were to reject the compact now before us. It would be a complete reversal of the policy established by Congress.

Opponents of the legislation have objected to the proposed site of the low-level waste disposal facility in Texas. These objections are not relevant to the compact. The compact presented in H.R. 558 is site neutral. In fact, the siting process conducted by the State of Texas and the compact between the States of Maine, Vermont, and Texas, are separate and independent. As I understand it, Texas initiated the siting process long before it began negotiations with Maine and Vermont. In fact, the proposed site still requires approval of the Texas Natural Resources Conservation Commission.

So the commission has just now started what will be a lengthy public proceeding to consider all the issues associated with the proposed site. So for those reasons, and many others, I would support the rule and also support the passage of this legislation.

The Texas commission has just now started what will be a lengthy public proceeding to consider all of the issues associated with the proposed site. If the proposed site is found to be deficient, then the license will not be granted and another site will have to be selected. Nonetheless, the siting issues such as water quality impacts, seismology matters, and related concerns are simply not germane to our consideration of our H.R. 558. Neither the compact nor H.R. 558 specify any particular site in Texas. This decision is solely the responsibility of the government of the State of Texas. The siting decision is the right of the State of Texas. We, in Washington, should not interfere in that process.

Finally, it is also important to understand that the compact under consideration contains real and significant advantages for all three States. With the compact, Texas will be able to limit the amount of low-level radioactive waste coming into its facility from out-of-State sources.

Maine and Vermont together produce a fraction of what is generated in Texas. For Maine and Vermont, the compact relieves either State from the need to develop its own facility. Given the relatively small volume of waste produced in Maine, developing such a facility would be disproportionately expensive.

These benefits are among the reasons that the compact received overwhelming support from the Governors and legislatures in all three States.

We should act now to approve H.R. 558 without amendments. It represents the States best efforts to comply with a Federal mandate. It is not directly linked to the development of any specific site in Texas. It contains major benefits for all three States. I urge you to support H.R. 558.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the fine gentleman from the State of Texas [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will not use 15 minutes, I assure the Chair and the other Members of the body. I do want to speak for more than 1 or 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, when I was elected in 1984, I came to the Congress in January 1985, I had the honor to be placed on what was then called the Interior Committee, chaired by the distinguished gentleman from Arizona, Mr. Mo Udall. One of the pieces of legislation that that committee moved that year was the Low-Level Waste Policy Act Amendments of 1985, in which it gave States the authority to create interstate compacts with other States for the disposal of low-level nuclear waste.

At that time, the State of Texas chose to create a compact simply within its State boundaries and not to create an interstate compact with other States. Since that time, the State of Texas has been in negotiations with the State of Vermont and the State of Maine and has decided to take advantage of the 1985 act and create an interstate compact. Nine other interstate compacts have been approved by this Congress since the Low-Level Waste Policy Act Amendments of 1985.

When this bill first came to the floor earlier this year, it was defeated, and it was defeated primarily because many Members felt like that since one or two Members in the State of Texas on the Republican side were opposed to this legislation, that the State of Texas itself and the Republican delegation in general was opposed.

Nothing could be further from the truth. The Governor of the State of Texas, the Honorable George Bush, strongly supports the passage of this act. The former Governor, the Honorable Ann Richards, formerly when she was Governor supported this act. So both our Democrat former Governor and Republican Governor support the passage of H.R. 558.

When it comes to a vote later this week, my guess is that almost, not every Texan, but almost every Texas Member will support this act. On the Republican side, all but one or two will support it.

This bill does not site the low-level waste depository within the State of Texas. It simply gives the State the authority to contract with Vermont and Maine for their low-level waste. It will be a State decision within Texas where to put the depository.

The Members from our State delegation that oppose this legislation apparently oppose it because they oppose where the State has so far decided to locate the depository. But this act, in and of itself, is not site specific. It simply gives the State of Texas and the State of Vermont and the State of Maine the right to enter into a compact as this Congress or other previous Congresses have given nine other compacts.

So I want to strongly support the rule. I hope we pass the rule, and then I would hope that all Members would vote positively on the underlying bill, H.R. 558. It is simply giving these three States, Texas, Vermont, and Maine, the right, as other States have, to enter into an interstate compact for the transmission and disposal of low-level nuclear waste.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GENE GREEN].

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and the bill, H.R. 558, the Texas low-level radioactive waste disposal compact.

Low-level waste is a byproduct of many industrial and medical activities that contribute to our economy in Texas and also enhance our lives. For example, it is not in my district but it serves my community, our hospitals in the city of Houston and around the State are national leaders in health care and medical research, and we have this low-level waste now literally on the property of the hospitals because they have to have someplace to put it. We have an agreement now with two other States, and that is why H.R. 558 is so important.

Responsible management of this waste that the hospitals produce include clothing, the laboratory supplies, and paper requiring permanent disposal in a site specifically designed for that purpose.

The States of Texas, Maine, and Vermont have all agreed to proceed with this compact which, by law, Congress must approve; however, the implementation and site selection is a State matter. And I believe the States who sign this compact should be allowed to proceed with it.

I know in Texas, Mr. Speaker, we have done that. Governor McKernan of Maine signed the compact in 1993 and the Maine voters approved it by referendum later that year. Governor Dean in Vermont in April 1994. In Texas, both the previous Governor, Governor Anne Richards, and current Governor Bush also strongly supported this compact. In fact, in 1991, as the State senator representing part of the Harris County area in Houston, I supported the compact as a State senator.

This law allows us to maintain control over this issue for the States and just simply allows the process to go forward.

We cannot continue to stick our head in the sand and say we do not have a place for this. By allowing this compact it would allow the State of Texas, a large geographic State with a great deal of urban area that produces this low-level waste, a place to store it other than the urban areas that is close to all of our homes.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we need this because our hospitals and our medical centers are contributing to it and they need to have someplace that is the least affected environment for it. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and also in support of H.R. 558.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas, who, frankly, he and I served in the State legislature together, but not in the 1990's, because he was in Congress then.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I guess my question for the gentleman is, since he was for this legislation when he was in the State Senate in the State of Texas, I guess my question is, would he agree to an amendment, if we were to offer an amendment, and under this rule we would be allowed to offer an amendment, that would restrict this compact to only these three States?

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that that was the intent when we voted for it in the State of Texas in the legislature; and as a Member of Congress, I would agree to that.

I am glad my colleague brought this up. If that would get my colleague from El Paso on board, I would be more than happy to support that amendment that would limit it to only those three States.

Mr. COLEMAN. Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe I should ask this question.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. I gave the gentleman the right answer, did I not?

Mr. COLEMAN. It was a good answer.

As I understand the compact, however, I wonder whether or not this Congress would be willing to restrict those commissioners in any vote they might subsequently take to allow other States to join the compact? Can we do that in this legislation; is that the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Again, I do not know. I would think the rule would allow that amendment to be considered, but the State legislature and the State of Texas would be the one that would actually vote on that. Again, I do not have any fear about the State legislature dealing with this issue because I worked on it then.

Mr. COLEMAN. So then the gentleman understands, if Connecticut, for example, which already has made some approaches to this compact, or proposed compact States, if Connecticut wanted to join the compact, then, of course, the gentleman's statement is that we cannot prohibit that here in the Congress; that that would be up to the commissioners only who serve on the commission; is that right?

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. It is not my bill, but I would support limiting it to the waste of the three States.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an answer to the question?

Mr. COLEMAN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that I was one of the authors of the amendments in 1985, and it is the intent of the legislation to give the States the right to negotiate between themselves for these compacts. It would, in my opinion, be outside the scope of this particular bill to try to limit any of the legislatures in what they could do.

I would oppose the gentleman's amendment if he were to offer such an amendment. I personally do not have a problem limiting the States, but the underlying legislation gives the States the right to negotiate these compacts, and the Congress' role is simply to ratify or to not ratify the compact.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I would say to my colleagues in the Congress that this is exactly the issue. The issue here is simply one we call back home greed. Texas decided they would get a whole bunch of money from a couple of States if they would take their waste and dump it. And, of course, everybody says, well, these will just be these three States.

The minute I suggest we make sure it is only these three States, everybody goes, oh no. We just heard my colleague from Texas a minute ago, just now, say, oh, no, we sure would not want to do that. After all, Texas could get more money for this.

So what if it is out in west Texas, in a poor little old town called Sierra Blanca; right? It is not in his backyard. Not in my colleague's backyard, Mr. GENE GREEN'S backyard, in Houston, TX, or up near Dallas. No, it is just out in west Texas. So who cares, other than those 900 people that live in that county. Who cares?

Well, I will tell my colleagues what. Putting it in an unsafe place, which they are doing, they are putting it near the epicenter of an earthquake that occurred just last April, 5.6 on the Richter scale, and everybody says we do not care. Heck, I am in Dallas, or I am in Houston. We do not care, it is out in west Texas. Who cares.

The point is, we are finally going to get to the truth of the matter, and the last gentleman who addressed this House told us what the truth of the matter is. What they do not care about is the consequences. If there is an earthquake or an accident that occurs in the next 300 or 400 years, they do not care. They do not care if they are on record because they will not be here. If it occurs in the next 5 or 10 years, my colleagues may care.

It may not look too good that they were willing to put this dump site where it should not be in the first place; and, second, that they are willing to take a nuclear reactor from Connecticut, because that is the next thing that is coming. I hope everybody understands that.

All of my colleagues in Texas that think this is smart better start thinking ahead just a little bit. This is not about Maine and Vermont and Texas only. Once they open this site, these commissioners will elect to put radioactive nuclear waste from every State, if they want to, because only they will be doing it.

We are told it is outside the scope for this Congress to act for the health care and welfare of the American people, and that is flat wrong.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would remind my colleagues that the issue we are talking about right now is the rule, and we have an open rule. It came out of the Committee on Rules on a unanimous voice vote. I do not want everyone's attention being diverted away from the fact that the debate on this issue will take place when the bill comes up. Right now the issue is the rule.

I respect the gentleman's arguments, but I would point out, let us focus back on the rule. It is an open rule. There is no reason anyone in here should object to the rule because it will allow the kind of healthy debate we have just seen.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McINNIS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for highlighting that. In fact, it was my intention to come here and only to speak on behalf of the rule.

I think the rule is fair and it gives us an opportunity to offer the very amendments that I was speaking about. But I came up here and all of a sudden I heard one of my colleagues from Maine tell us what a great bill this was.

Maybe we can make it a good bill, if we are allowed to amend it and we get the support we had last time of a majority of this Congress to permit us to do that. I thank the gentleman for pointing it out and giving me the opportunity to say I, too, am in support of the rule.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, the gentleman will have that opportunity to amend, and I certainly appreciate where the gentleman comes from and his purpose in affording that debate, but I do want to remind all of us that we will have a lot more time for debate, so I think we should try to wrap this rule up.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas [Ms. JACKSON-LEE].

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much and I rise to make several brief points because I support both the rule and the bill.

I think it is important to focus our attention where it should be focused, and that is, one, this is an environmentally driven bill. This is a question of what to do with low-level radioactive waste, something that raises enough question for many of us. Whenever we hear of nuclear reactors or radioactive waste we are concerned.

I am concerned about the research and the medical services done at the Texas Medical Center and the inability of that facility, that brings about good health and saves lives, to be able to find a safe and environmentally protected area to eliminate low-level radioactive waste.

The other point is that this is a bipartisan effort. The former Governor of Texas, Anne Richards, supported this, as well as the present Governor.

Lastly, let me say that this is not a matter that is a question of sites, or one site that has already been selected. I think there should be reasonable discussion and a fair discussion that no poor area, no poor neighborhood should be biasly selected as the site for this. The commissioners should take into consideration the very safest of locations being driven by the environmental aspects of what we are trying to do here.

I think it is particularly important to instruct the States to work these arrangements with the requirement that safety and the environment be crucial issues to be addressed. In fact, no State, I hope, would want to jeopardize communities with a site that would not be environmentally safe, focusing on the question that there is low-level radioactive waste, we must do something with it, but it must be safely done.

H.R. 558 provides an open rule. I think that is extremely positive. I hope we can draw on more bipartisan discussion to make this the best bill, because this is something that should not have the tensions of disagreement when we all realize that this is a national problem that is impacting our States across the country. If there is a question of other States being involved, I think hard questions should be asked, but this particular Texas, Maine, Vermont low-level radioactive waste compact has reasonably been reviewed by the respective Governors, as I said, both Democratic and Republican alike.

The compact limits Vermont and Maine to 20 percent of the total volume. It is a question of medical radioactive waste that is a prime concern for all of us in the State of Texas, and particularly, as I said earlier, the question dealing with the site selection should be carefully reviewed. I think it is important that we realize that there will be no site selection in Texas without full public hearings. In that instance, all of those communities that may ultimately be impacted will have the complete access to those public hearings. the commissioners should be sensitive to this.

I would ask my colleagues to make this truly a bipartisan piece of legislation, for it is for the safety of all of us, and it certainly is for the safety of those of us who are concerned about how we eliminate, and safely and environmentally secure low-level radioactive waste.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 558, the Texas-Maine-Vermont low-level radioactive waste compact. This bill has received considerable attention since it concerns the issue of States' rights, the issue of protecting the environment and the rights of citizens to determine the quality of life in their communities.

Since the 1985 amendments to the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act, the 50 States have been responsible for managing their low-level radioactive waste program because the Federal Government recognized that States are better suited to implement such policies due to their close attention to local concerns.

There are already nine State compacts in existence representing agreements among 42 States. Congress passed the bills approving those compacts under the Suspension Calendar. The House Commerce Subcommittee on Energy and Power unanimously passed H.R. 558. The full committee passed the bill by a vote of 41 to 2.

The Governors of Texas, Maine, and Vermont strongly support this legislation. The State Legislatures in Texas, Maine, and Vermont have approved the compact. The majority of the Texas congressional delegation supports this bill.

Contrary to popular belief, a specific disposal site has not yet been designated. The appropriate agencies in Texas have been considering various sites. It will be located in Texas, however, since Texas would have the vast majority of the low-level radioactive waste. The compact limits Vermont and Maine to 20 percent of the total volume. The Texas medical center is without available alternative.

No site will be selected without public hearings that give concerned citizens the opportunity to express their views on the location of the facility. Environmental agencies will conduct the appropriate review and resolve environmental concerns in accordance with current law and regulations. No radioactive waste from States other than Texas, Maine, and Vermont would be stored at the facility. The future facility must meet Federal regulatory standards developed by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission relating to safety in the construction and operation of the facility.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill, which approves this compact among Texas, Maine, and Vermont and permits those states to manage their low-level radioactive waste in compliance with Federal environmental law and regulations.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT].

Mr. BRYANT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, first with regard to those Members from Texas and those who are concerned about this issue from Texas, in the dialog with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON] a moment ago I think for the first time we saw what really is going to happen if this thing passes. And maybe nobody else should care, but if Members are from Texas, they ought to care.

Mr. Speaker, what it means is that this commission is going to be able to accept nuclear waste from every State of the Union. It is, in my view, very regrettable.

We are going to offer an amendment to say that it is limited to the two States involved, Vermont and Maine. I see no way to justify doing otherwise. The bill has been lobbied to Members of Congress from my region to say that it just involved the two States. The fact of the matter is that it does not. If it did, I think no one would mind if we offered an amendment that said this would be a compact between the three States.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYANT of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my good friend for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that there are 9 compacts that cover 41 States. My understanding of the Federal law is that if 1 of those 41 States want to get out of their existing compact and come into this compact which has not yet been approved, that that would take congressional approval. I could be proven wrong on that, but it is a fact that there are 41 States that are in these types of compacts.

Mr. Speaker, I have not received any information in my office from the Governor's office, or anybody in the Texas Legislature, that they are trying to enlarge the compact.

Mr. BRYANT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, if that is the case, then surely the gentleman will support us in our amendment that will say this compact will be limited to Texas, Maine, and Vermont. Would the gentleman support us in that amendment?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would continue to yield, on a personal level I do not have a problem with that.

Mr. BRYANT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I mean on the big board when we vote.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would continue to yield, my problem with that particular amendment, if offered by the gentleman from Dallas, TX [Mr. BRYANT] and the gentleman from El Paso, TX [Mr. COLEMAN], is that the underlying law that gives the Congress the right to approve or disapprove the compact, gives the States the right to negotiate the compact, and we would be stepping into the State area.

Mr. BRYANT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, it is just a plain and simple concept. If the gentleman wants the entire United States to be able to dump nuclear waste in our State under approval from this commission, then he would vote against our amendment. If the gentleman believes we ought to limit it to just the two States, and I cannot imagine why he would not want to do that, why would the gentleman not vote for the amendment and let us make this thing do what everybody has promised that it would do?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would continue to yield, does the gentleman have information that leads him to believe that these other 41 States are going to get out of their existing compacts and want to come into this particular compact?

Mr. BRYANT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, again reclaiming my time, in the first place there are 50 States, so there are 9 unaccounted for that would obviously be interested, No. 1.

First, I cannot predict the future, but I do know this, no matter what the situation might be, I do not want them to come and dump their nuclear waste in Texas. So the amendment will simply say that, and I would hope to have the gentleman's support of that amendment.

Second, I would call the Members of the House to look at this from a national perspective. We do not wish to avoid responsibility under the law to deal with this problem of siting a nuclear waste depository. But from the standpoint of the national interest, this is not a small matter.

The site that has been chosen is one that is on an international border, very close to the Rio Grande River in an area that is a volatile earthquake zone. This area experienced an earthquake scoring 5.6 on the Richter scale on April 13 of this year. The epicenter was less than 100 miles away and the quake was felt by individuals several hundreds of miles away.

Mr. Speaker, numerous earthquakes have occurred in this area. The largest was 6.4 in 1931, with its epicenter only 40 miles from the site, and the U.S. Geological Survey has concluded that quakes of 7.5 in magnitude could occur at any time along 14 faults in the immediate vicinity.

Mr. Speaker, it is not in the national interest to ratify this knowing that the State of Texas plans to locate this in this place. If it were to pollute the Rio Grande River, we would have an enormous problem with Mexico; a problem not only for the people of Texas, but all the people of the United States who would have to help pay this liability.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that we have it in an earthquake zone is preposterous. In effect, the legislature and other parts of the Texas State Government decided to put it in a place that has no political power, hardly any people, rather than putting it in a place that has people and political power, and they did so regardless of the illogical nature of their decision.

Mr. Speaker, we will oppose it and will offer an amendment to provide that if this is approved, that this cannot be located in a seismically active area and an amendment that it will be limited to the three States mentioned, Texas, Maine, and Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I hope when we do, Members will support us on those amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PALLONE].

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I also rise in support of the rule. I wanted to really point out that this legislation did come out of our Subcommittee on Energy and Power on a bipartisan basis. I do support it as the ranking member.

Obviously, this is an open rule, as has been mentioned, and there is no reason why Members cannot bring up any substantive amendment that they would like. Obviously, some of the amendments will be brought up.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to mention, as I think has been brought out, that this is the 10th compact to receive congressional approval. Basically, the compact system envisions that low-level radioactive waste policy is developed with the strong support of the National Governors' Association, and under the law the task of selecting the disposal sites is the States' responsibilities. So, the subcommittee, in reporting out the bill, was cognizant of the fact that the States involved in the compact do support it.

Traditionally, Congress' responsibility is to simply act quickly on the compacts' request by the respective States and if all is in order, to approve it promptly.

Mr. Speaker, I do not really relish getting involved in a Texas battle here. I guess I learned a long time ago not to do that, and I think I am about to be. One of the Texas Members already suggested to me that perhaps they could bring up an amendment moving the site to New Jersey. I hope that does not happen.

Mr. BRYANT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALLONE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BRYANT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to propose that. I think the gentleman from New Jersey has been constructive in his effort to deal with this issue. But I would point out to the gentleman that it is not possible to imagine that it does not bother this Member, or any ranking member somewhat, that the decision has been made to locate this in a seismically active zone.

Now, recognizing that, and the national implications of that since it is on the Rio Grande River, an international border with Mexico, would not the gentleman agree that we ought to at least amend the bill to say that it cannot be put in an obviously irresponsible place just so that local legislators can avoid the inconvenience of making the tough decision?

Would the gentleman not see the logic in at least saying this is unique with regard to this compact, We are not going to let you locate it there, but you will have to locate it some place else?

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, as the gentleman knows, I did not support any amendments like that in the subcommittee and I would not support it on the floor. Again, because my understanding is that this has been looked into and that those on the State level that looked into it took that into consideration.

That is not to in any way to prejudice the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT], obviously, from bringing that up and arguing it. But my position is that the States and the legislatures that looked at this looked into those problems and, therefore, made that decision to support it.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALLONE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think the reason the gentleman from Texas asked the question is simply because it will be taxpayers in New Jersey and Kansas and California and New York that will be participating in the cleanup of an accident when it occurs. It is not going to just be Texas, Maine, or Vermont.

I hope that the gentleman and my colleagues understand that, that it will be the responsibility of all of us, because it is an international river and an international boundary that belongs to the United States as well as to Mexico.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I would just say that I see no reason why that should not be brought up on the floor and discussed, but again I would say that these issues were brought up in the subcommittee and our opinion was that they were decided on the State level and that we should respect that.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me apologize to my colleagues. We were trying to wrap up our telecommunications conference, and so I could not get here as quickly as I would have liked.

Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely important piece of legislation for the State of Texas and the other two States involved. It is important because it involves the issue of waste and there has been a decision by three State legislatures on what to do in this particular compact, as the States are allowed in the underlying Federal statute. The process has been pristine in terms of meeting what is allowed under the statute.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important for my colleagues to understand that the site that has been chosen by the State of Texas will be used as a waste site regardless of what the House of Representatives does. That decision has been made. That is where waste generated in the State of Texas will be disposed.

Mr. Speaker, the advantage of our State entering into a compact with other States is basically we put a lock on what waste our State at any point in the future would have to accept. That is why it is so important that the State has made the decision, entered into the compact and made the ironclad decision that that site is going to be used, whether this compact passes or not.

Mr. Speaker, I would just ask my friends and my colleagues to look at this not only in terms of process, process that has been met both in the State legislatures and in regard to the Federal statute, but also in terms of this being a final decision. The only thing the House would do, if they overturned this particular decision, is set a very bad precedent for other States wishing to enter into similar compacts. If this decision by the three States is overturned, it is the first time that States having made a decision will have that decision contradicted by an action of the House, and I think that is tragic.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would only hope that the gentleman understands that there is a distinction with a difference. Just because the Texas House and the Texas Senate made a decision to place a dumpsite near an international boundary, I do not happen to think should obligate taxpayers from the rest of the country to have to be involved in the cleanup. I see that as a huge difference.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, when we get into the debate on this particular issue, we will talk about the specifics of what the State of Texas has done in constructing this particular facility. The safeguards that have been built in to meet any possible contingency are more than adequate.

The State has gone far beyond what science and engineering would necessarily dictate. To think that there is going to be some sort of disaster that is going to burden the rest of the country I think goes beyond reason.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DOGGETT].

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, the concern in many parts of Texas about this bill is that after it passes, it will not just be poor old Rudolf whose nose is all aglow. There are many Texans who are not eager to have our State change its name from the Lone Star State to the Lone Dump State.

It has become very apparent in the course of the debate thus far that that is exactly what is going to happen, because the sponsors of this measure are unwilling to limit it to the three States of Texas, Vermont and Maine. They envision a vehicle here where an unelected commission will be able to expand this compact to include an unlimited number of States.

Mr. Speaker, I think that there is some question as to why we are here today debating this rule in the first place. It has only been about 3 months since this House overwhelmingly rejected this compact and all the problems that it poses. The only thing that has changed between the time that this House rejected this compact and now is that we have had more lobbyists swarming around this Capitol than we will find gnats on the banks of the Colorado River on a June morning. They have been working overtime to set up a compact that can be expanded to make Texas the Lone Dump State.

There have also been developments since that time in our neighboring partner with reference to environmental issues throughout the Southwest, and that is the country of Mexico. It was earlier in 1995 that the Governor of the neighboring State of where this site will be located wrote to the Governor of the State of Texas to express his great concern over the news that there would be the construction of what the Governor quite properly referred to as a nuclear cemetery in Sierra Blanca, TX.

Mr. Speaker, he went on to say the confinement of radioactive material in that place endangers the health of the population due to the possible emissions of radioactivity into the air, soil, and water.

□ 1400

Of course, that letter was sent a couple of earthquakes ago with reference to this site. Just within the past few days, the Commission on Ecology and Environment of the Mexican House of Delegates has also expressed its concern saying, and I quote, that this low level waste contains dangerous concentrations of radioactivity that are contaminated with plutonium, a material that has a radioactive life of 240,000 years. The latent danger for our population is represented by the fact that the land indicated by the State of Texas for the project is over a geological fault known as the Apache Fault, the largest one in the State of Texas. There have been movements there that have registered an intensity of 5.3 on the Richter scale which, if they occur again, cause fissures in the storage sites and consequently contaminate the underground deposits of water that feed the sister cities of El Paso and Juarez.

This is not a matter for short-term decision. It will affect generations and generations to come.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MCINNIS] has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

What is the rule doing down here? I would once again remind my colleagues it is down here because we passed it by unanimous consent on a voice vote. It is an open rule. We should not have this kind of debate on this rule, which is what everybody has an opportunity to amend.

Let me go back just a second. I would ask the gentleman from Texas to respond to a question, and I will yield to the gentleman for that response, and it is, does he support the open rule? That is, I think, the crux of what we are arguing here.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DOGGETT].

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I supported the rejection of this whole measure by the House last time, and I guess we will have another opportunity to do the same thing. I think the open rule is a good one, if we are going to consider this, but it should not be here at all.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize one point, that with the approval of this compact, there will be 10 compacts covering 45 States. It was the decision of our State legislature to enter a compact with Maine and Vermont. In my view and obviously the view of the legislature and our State leadership, it is much preferred if Texas is already designated a site. Again I want people to understand the site is going to be where the legislature has decided, whether this House acts or not.

Is it better for us to have a partner like Maine and Vermont or should we be subject to anyone's waste? Should we be subject to the waste of California or New York or Illinois or some other larger State? We have had a concerted effort to obfuscate what is the real issue here. The real issue is whether we are going to stand with the decision made by three legislatures on a decision that solely should be within the province of those State legislatures, as long as it meets the Federal statute, which they have.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, let me just first of all say that I am in strong agreement with the rule. It is an open rule and will allow for a substantive debate.

Let me recapitulate some of the main points that are involved in this legislation. No. 1, we hear a lot of discussion on the floor of this House about local control and respecting the rights of the people back home. This legislation was discussed intensively in three different State legislatures. The people of Texas through their legislature approved this compact. The people of Maine did the same. The people of Vermont also approved this compact.

I should point out the Governor of Texas is a Republican; the Governor of Vermont is a Democrat and, as it happens, the Governor of Maine is an Independent.

Second, as has already been stated, there are nine compacts that have already been approved by the Congress, impacting 42 States. This will be the 10th compact. I think from a precedent point of view, it is important for this Congress to pass this compact.

Third, what has also, I think, not been made clear is this Congress is not designating a specific disposal site. That is not what we are doing. Presumably, the people of Texas have a process to determine what is in the best interest of their own people. Frankly, I would hope and expect that the people of Texas would not do anything that is environmentally dangerous to the people of their region. We in Congress are not making that decision. The people of Texas are making that decision, and I hope that we could respect that process.

I would simply suggest that from a precedent point of view, from respect for local control, we should support this rule and we should eventually support the bill.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, since the gentleman is a member from Vermont, maybe he could give us some idea. I heard my colleague from Houston, TX a minute ago suggest that it has been reviewed by three different State legislatures. Did the legislature of Vermont get to hold hearings on the siting of the facility in west Texas?

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I believe that is left to the people of Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, so it was really only one legislature, not three; we cannot speak for Maine, but obviously just one.

Mr. SANDERS. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, there is no secret that the depository is going to be in Texas. That is a decision for the people of Texas.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, just to amplify on what my good friend just said, and he may want to retake the mike. Under the compact, Texas has full control of the site, the development, the operation and management and the closure of the low-level waste disposal facility. It really would not matter for his State to come and review where Texans decided to put a particular site, whether the House passes this or not. We will dispose of our waste at that particular site. If we do not pass this compact, we are going to be subject to the entire country's waste coming to that particular site.

Also the gentleman raised a question about the procedure in Texas. Let me just point out, our house of representatives passed the site decision and the compact by a voice vote, voice vote in the Texas House of Representatives. The Texas Senate passed this by a vote of 26 to 2. The legislature wants this particular compact as does our Governor. It is important, if one is concerned about the environment and they are a Texan, they should want this particular compact.

I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HALL].

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that a lot of statements that have been made here have very little to do actually with H.R. 558. These statements I think go toward and should go toward the proposed low level site and will be the subject of a lengthy and detailed permit review process that the Texas Natural Resources and Conservation Commission is to conduct in Texas this coming year. It is there I think that the statements that have been made here regarding the site should be expressed and probably not on the floor of this House.

H.R. 558 is a compact between Texas, Maine and Vermont. That has been said over and over again. It was the subject of many legislative hearings, how many I really do not know, floor debate, negotiations by the Governors of these States, including the Statewide referendum. All of these actions were taken because we here in Congress directed the States to do this by legislation action passed in 1980 and 1985.

The States have complied with their directive, and I think we ought to honor there good-faith efforts by vote to go ratify this compact. I urge Members to vote for H.R. 558.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALL of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I guess the only thing that question about what the gentleman says that we are going to have hearings next year. That is after the site has already been selected. So it does not do us a lot of good out there.

I will say I am proud of those two Senators since the country that is concerned here, called Hudspeth County, TX does not have a State Senator from that county. The one Senator that represents that area may or may not have voted no, and certainly we only had one representative, again not from that county. So I am not surprised by the vote in Texas. It is that county does not have a lot of population, and it is out in the desert, and I understand the gentleman's saying that, well, Texas has made the decision. All I would hope is that we try to not feel that we have to rubber-stamp an act that was a mistake. I do not think the Congress ought to be called on to do that.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert extraneous material at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The material referred to is as follows:

*Contract Bills, 67% restrictive; 33% open.  All legislation, 55% restrictive; 45% open.  Restrictive rules are those which limit the number of amendments which can be offered, and include so called modified open and modified closed rules as well as completely closed rules and rules providing for consideration in the House as opposed to the Committee of the Whole. This definition of restrictive rule is taken from the Republican chart of resolutions reported from the Rules Committee in the 103rd Congress. * Not included in this chart are three bills which should have been placed on the Suspension Calendar. H.R. 101, H.R. 400, H.R. 440.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I was not able to yield just a moment ago to my friend. If he wants me to yield, I will, after I make the one statement. Not only is Governor Bush, our current Governor, endorsing this, but former Governor Ann Richards endorses not only the process but the site that was selected.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman. I understand the politics of doing what they did. What I have to tell the gentleman is, however, it is something I hope that we will have during the course of the debate. I hope to be able to show this House the geological findings concerning not just this site but others that were far more suitable. But politically, both the Governors the gentleman just cited, and politically the legislature would refuse to site it where it was the safest. I understand that.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, let me ask the gentleman, is he glad this is an open rule?

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, absolutely. As I told my colleagues on the Committee on Rules, I intend to support this rule and hope it passes.

Mr. FIELDS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's comment.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LONGLEY].

Mr. LONGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this process that we are debating today stems from a 1985 Low Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Policy Amendment Act. In full compliance with the procedures established under that statute, the States of Maine, Vermont, and Texas entered into negotiations that were approved by citizens groups and by legislative bodies and by executives in each of the three States.

This is a win/win situation for all three States. In particular, the State of Texas is going to benefit to the extent of $50 million that will be contributed by the States of Maine and Vermont. I think it is a positive for all three parties involved.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as we wrap up the debate here, I would just want to remind my colleagues that the issue in front of us is the rule. The rule came out of the Committee on Rules on a unanimous vote. It is an open rule.

Today we have heard some very good debate. We have heard healthy debate. There is going to be an opportunity if this rule passes, which I fully expect it to do on voice vote here on the House floor, then all of this debate can be presented again at the proper time.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from the State of California, my colleague on the Committee on Rules, and would urge a "yes" vote on the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UPTON). The Chair will begin special orders without prejudice to further legislative business.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of May 12, 1995, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

PARTIAL LIST OF MOST RECENT CASES OF INTIMIDATION AND ARRESTS BY THE CUBAN REGIME

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DIAZ-BALART] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, the Cuban dictator just returned from a trip to Asia. He was disappointed. The Japanese gave him a credit of $100,000. I think he wanted a little bit more than that.

He is in poor health. Things do not seem to be going right for him. But nevertheless that does not keep him from engaging in his traditional repression.

Castro has initiated a new campaign of terror and aggression against all of his internal opposition and his henchmen have been attacking the members of a new group that has formed that has brought together over 130 of the opposition groups within the island. It is Concilio Cubano, Cuban Council. So Castro is paranoid, and he is cracking down on them, and in, for him traditional, but nevertheless unacceptable manner.

Dissidents of all ideological tendencies have joined together in this Cuban Council. So I think Castro has reason to be worried.

In the last few weeks, Jose Martinez Puig, executive secretary of the Proconstitutional Democracy Association has been detained numerous times by Castro's henchmen.

Castro's henchmen have also harassed Felix Fleites Posada, president of the Proconstitutional Democracy Association.

Agents of the dictatorship have invaded the home of the well-known opposition leader Elizardo Sanchez Santa Cruz, obviously seeking to intimidate him.

Amado Gonzalez Paz and Lazaro Garcia Torres have both been arrested and their families' physical safety has been threatened if they remained in Cuban Council.

Recently, Nerys Goristoza Campo Alegre and Marta Ramirez Jerez, both members of the Popular Democratic Alliance, were also arrested. Another member of the Popular Democratic Alliance, Maria de la Caridad Salazar Ramirez was thrown in a prison cell with 14 common criminals.

Radamaes Alfaro Garcia was arrested and told that he had to convince his mother, Beatriz Garcia Alvarez, and brother, Rinaldo Alfaro Garcia, to resign from the Cuban Council.

Lazaro Miguel Rivero de Quesada was arrested along with his mother, Dulce Maria de Quesada. This is within recent weeks, Mr. Speaker.

Sergio Aguiara Cruz was sentenced to 4 years in prison under the charge of predelinquent dangerousness. Aguiara is the president of the Union of Cubans for Liberty.

In Camaguey Province, well-known dissident Antonio Femenias Echemendia, has been continuously harassed by Castro's state security for the last 5 weeks.

Also, in Camaguey, Alberto Hernandez Frometa, from the group Man's Human Rights, was arrested.

The regime has consistently sought to intimidate Marcelino Soto, Jose Nieves Arrieta and Bernardo Fuentes Cambior on a regular basis for their activities on behalf of human rights.

The list goes on, Mr. Speaker. This is just the tip of the iceberg. Some dissidents issued a statement in support of the conference that was held in Beijing, the World Conference on Women, and Ileana Somellan Fernandez, her home was ransacked by state security on August 25 for doing that. Also, September 1 and September 2, several members of the group called Mothers for Solidarity were arrested.

Marta Maria Vega Cabrera was summoned to appear at headquarters of state security in Havana, where she was interrogated, also, for a statement she made to an international journalist.

On September 2, state security agents visited Mercedes Paradas Antunez, where she was accused along with Aida Rosa Jimenez, of "planning a protest march" on Havana.

On the same day, Raquel Naranjo Ruize and Aida Rosa Jimenez were continously followed by state security agents in Havana in a manner that they subsequently describe to the international press as insolent and incessant.

Moises Rodriguez Quesada, Leonardo Calvo, and Manuel Cuesda Morua also have been victims of threats and interrogations from state security. And, of course, Carmen Arias Jose Miranda, Francisco Chavino, Omar del Pozo, and Colonel Enrique Labrada and Reverend Orson Villa, these are all political prisoners, they remain incarcerated.

I want to see where the international community is, Mr. Speaker. Where is the Clinton administration? Where is that State Department that we pay those salaries to? Where are they denouncing this? Where is the international community? Where is the United Nations denouncing this, Mr. Speaker? Where are they? Earn your salaries, bureaucrats. Earn your salaries. At least denounce this every once in a while.

This is going on now in Cuba, and I want to hear one condemnation by the international press or the international organizations.

Where are they Mr. Speaker? We will continue talking about this.

CRUNCHING NUMBERS, CRUNCHING PEOPLE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DOGGETT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I would tell the last speaker that where some of those people from the State Department are is that they are at home or maybe they are out doing their Christmas shopping because under the orders of Speaker NEWT GINGRICH we are paying our Federal employees not to work again this week, just as we paid them not to work in November.

You see, this is part of an extremist approach to Government that, if you hate Government so much, as some of these Republicans do, the way to demonstrate how much you dislike the Government is to pay the Government workers not to do any work, and so some, I think it is 9,000 members of the State Department, are not at work today, even though I am confident that the vast majority of them would like to be at work doing their job for America, dealing on issues with Cuba and dealing with issues even closer to home.

But our Republican colleagues have decided to shut down the Government and to pay our Federal worker not to work.

I guess perhaps all of this is designed to focus national attention on the whole concept of a Republican Christmas. You know, the Republican Christmas, it is probably just like the Christmas that you celebrate in your hometown. The only difference is that the only stockings that Santa stuffs are the silk stockings, and that is the way that the Republican Christmas proposed in this Republican budget would be presented to the American people were it not for the steadfast position that President Clinton and others of us within the Democratic Party have taken with regard to its misplaced priorities.

You see, it is my position that our Republican colleagues have, to this day, not ever come forward with a budget that is truly balanced. Yes; they do know how to crunch the numbers and calculate it all out so that that part will become even, and that is an important part of having a balanced budget.

But balancing the budget is being concerned with more than just crunching the numbers. It is also as a set of national priorities, a matter of considering how much you crunch the people. And when it comes to crunching the people, this Republican balanced budget is way out of balance because it crunches a good many middle-class families in this country. It crunches many seniors in this country because its objective is to stuff those silk stockings with one tax advantage after another.

Indeed, even that very gross tax loophole that we attempted to close earlier this year that lets those people who have prospered the most from America, who have made literally billions of dollars and who can celebrate this Christmas in Belize or in the Bahamas or somewhere in the Caribbean, having renounced their American citizenship and burned their citizenship card, torn it up, at the same time having burned the American Treasury and the American taxpayer, renouncing their citizenship to avoid paying their taxes, that loophole is still largely present under this Republican budget.

Of course, on the eve of the elections next year, our Republican colleagues propose with their eat-dessert-first budget to provide the checks to people on the eve of the election, not unlike some old ward heeler passing out hams just prior to the election time, to try to sell the idea that the only way to get the deficit down is to make it go up next year, which is the approach that is taken in this Republican budget.

But the vast majority of the tax breaks, though there is an occasional sweetener, is designed to go to those at the top of the economic ladder, who have benefited from America.

We have heard that we have had nothing but horrors in this country for the last six decades, to hear the majority leader speak the other day. Well, some people have done rather well in America during those six decades of evil. They prospered. They have become millionaires and billionaires, and now the Republicans would reward them with huge tax breaks, tax breaks that will drive the deficit up next year, that will cause it to explode in the year 2002, in the last part of this decade, and all of that is going to be paid by the impact that it has on middle-class families.

A commentator just earlier this week reported on the impact on middle-class families that suddenly find a parent, a loved one who has to go into a nursing home either because of a disability or because of advanced years, and it is going to be possible under the Republican budget as proposed to require the children to pay for the nursing home expenses which can run up to $30,000, $40,000 a year of the senior, to tap into the assets of those middle-class families at the same time they may be trying to get a young person through school, through college, trying to struggle to make ends meet themselves, but to force them to have to pay those expenses.

That is the way people get crunched under this Republican budget. We need a truly balanced budget that is balanced to the people of America.

TRIBUTE TO THE BRAVERY OF MARIETTA POLICE OFFICER MIKE POWELL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARR] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise before the House today to pay tribute to the brave actions of Marietta GA, police officer Mike Powell, a 6-year veteran of the department, a constituent, and a friend. Officer Powell's quick response to a 911 call this past Saturday saved the life of a local woman while placing himself in great danger.

Approaching the apartment building in which this woman and her husband lived, officer Powell heard screams from the woman upstairs as she hid from her attacker in a bedroom. Upon entering the stairwell leading to the apartment, he found the husband already dead. Then suddenly Mike started receiving gun fire. He quickly returned fire on the man until back-up arrived and subdued the perpetrator.

While making this extraordinary stand, officer Powell was hit two times. Thankfully he escaped serious harm, with one shot grazing his side and the other ricocheting off his gun and hitting him in the arm. The woman was able to flee the apartment unharmed during the commotion. It is certain the quick response of Officer Powell saved the woman's life.

Every day the heroic actions of men and women serving in police departments across the country save lives. The job is stressful, dangerous, and frightening, yet thousands put their lives on the line so that all of us may live more securely. Mike Powell's bravery is a tribute to him and a reminder to all of us of how much the men and women in blue do to protect and to serve. On behalf of the citizens of Marietta and the entire Seventh District of Georgia, I commend Officer Powell for his selfless actions in the line of duty and at great personal sacrifice.

RTC REPORT EXONERATES CLINTONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, we live, as we all know, in an era in which good news is no news. So the recent report issued by Jay Stevens on behalf of the Resolution Trust Corporation which exonerates President Clinton and Mrs. Clinton from any liability to the RTC involving Madison Guaranty has gone largely unnoticed in the press. People who have an interest in perpetuating inaccurate accusations against President Clinton and Mrs. Clinton have understandably ignored this.

People will remember that Jay Stevens is the Republican who was a U.S. Attorney appointed by the previous Republican administrations who was considering running for the U.S. Senate as a Republican. He is a deeply committed conservative partisan, but also an honest man, not that there is any inconsistency there. He was hired by the RTC to investigate President Clinton and Mrs. Clinton. Indeed, it was the fact that so committed a Republican partisan had been hired that caused the uproar in the White House, when people said to the Treasury Department, how could you let this happen?

Well, Mr. Stevens has now given his final report.

The RTC has asked that grand jury information not be released, and I have none here. They have asked that their future litigation strategy not be discussed, and I would not do that here. I will quote from Mr. Stevens' report.

"The foregoing list contains essentially all the documents regarding Whitewater that seem to have been addressed to or written by the Clintons." I skip a little bit. It says, "Therefore, on this record, there is no basis to assert that the Clintons knew anything of substance about the McDougals's advances to Whitewater, the source of the funds used to make those advances, or the source of the funds used to make payments on bank debt. In particular, there is no evidence that the Clintons knew anything of substance about the transactions as to which the RTC might be able to establish liability as to people other than the Clintons."

Skipping again to the summation, "On this record," this is Jay Stevens, the very committed Republican who was hired by the RTC over the objections of the Clinton administration to investigate the Clinton involvement with RTC, Madison Guaranty, Whitewater, here is his final recommendation based on his extensive survey of all of the evidence: "On this record, there is no basis to charge the Clintons with any kind of primary liability for fraud or intentional misconduct. This investigation has revealed no evidence to support any such claims, nor would the record support any claim of secondary or derivative liability for the possible misdeeds of others."

Skipping a little, "There are legal theories by which one can become reliable for the conduct of others—e.g., conspiracy and aiding and abetting. On this evidentiary record, however, these theories have no application to the Clintons. To hold one liable for conspiracy or aiding or abetting, the RTC must plead and prove the elements of these theories. These elements include a general awareness of the wrongful acts being committed by others and an intention to assist in the commission of the primary offenses. There is no evidence here that the Clintons had any such knowledge or intent. Accordingly, there is no basis to use them."

Mr. Speaker, partisan Republicans, extreme right wingers, and others have been engaged in a desperate, unyielding, incessant search for evidence to tarnish the Clintons with regard to Whitewater. They have found none. There is no evidence, and here we have a comprehensive report by a Republican prosecutor, a would-be candidate for office, who thoroughly investigates this and, as conclusively as you can get an investigator to say, he says there is no basis for this.

Pirandello wrote a play, "Six Characters in Search of an Author." Our Republican colleagues have collaborated on a more fantastic creative work. It is hundreds of accusations against the Clintons in search of any evidence. And Mr. Stevens, a professional investigator and Republican charged with looking into not just criminal liability, but civil liability, has concluded that after all of the evidence is examined, there is no basis whatsoever to make an accusation against the Clintons.

Will this stop our colleagues from their accusations? No. But it ought to mean that the public will receive those accusations with the total lack of respect to which Jay Stevens says they are entitled.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to exchange places in the special order list with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

PROBLEMS IN THE CLINTON ADMINISTRATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TIAHRT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot of nonsense about the Republicans ruining Christmas for some of the Government workers. I want to talk a little bit about the Fourth District of Kansas. We have 1,038 Federal workers subject to furlough. This week the President vetoed legislation that would have put 940 of them back to work, 940, but the President vetoed Christmas for those employees and their families. Thank you very much, Mr. President.

You know, there is struggle going on here about balancing the budget, and we have come to a real critical point, because if we are unable to balance the budget now, then when will we balance it? We have a future to think about for our children. We are $5 trillion in debt. It is a tremendous amount of money. We are trying to strengthen our economy.

We have seen two dramatic moves in our economy. No. 1, when we went through the 5,000 mark on the New York Stock Exchange, it was the same week when we thought we had an agreement to balance the Federal budget in 7 years. This week, when we thought the balanced budget had failed, the stock market dropped dramatically, over 100 points, and then bounced back the next day, when Alan Greenspan, Chairman of the Federal Reserve, said that he hoped that we could get to a balanced budget, and in good faith he was going to lower interest rates a quarter of a percent.

But it is going to be very difficult for the President to concede to a balanced budget, because his liberal agenda does not include balancing the budget, only paying off liberal interest groups. Plus he is being dragged down by members of his own Cabinet.

Currently Secretary O'Leary in the Department of Energy is falling under fire. It started out with GAO reports as early as the first part of this year when they reported that she had a "mission a minute," quote-unquote, a mission a minute, that there were very large management problems within the Department. Then Vice President GORE's National Performance Review came out, which said that portions of the Department of Energy, like of the environmental management portion, was 40-percent inefficient, and it could cost taxpayers $70 billion over the next 30 years.

Then we started to see travel problems, with the Secretary of the Department of Energy having the highest travel budget per trip of anyone inside the President's Cabinet, staying at four-star hotels, traveling first class, taking along large staffs for her domestic travel. But that was all based on her current responsibilities in the Department of Energy, which are all domestic.

Then we started to hear about the international trips. Secretary O'Leary has taken 16 international trips, taking along as many as 50 staff members, as many as 68 guests, often CEO's who do not pay their portion of the travels. One trip cost $720,000. With 16 of them, it is in the millions of dollars, the costs of this. Often she travels on the same plane as Madonna leases. So the material girl of Clinton's Cabinet is spending unwisely taxpayer dollars in these travels.

She hires photographers and video crews to come along, because she wants to be caught at her best. She is very worried about the public image she is presenting and has been quoted as trying to bring the second term of the President's campaign, the ideals of it, to the forefront now.

In the zeal to project a good public image, Secretary O'Leary has hired a personal media consultant at a cost of $75,000 per year to the taxpayers. She also employs inside the Department of Energy more than 520 public relations employees at a payroll of over $25 million per year. She has even hired a private investigative firm to investigate reporters and Congressmen who are tarnishing her favorable image. She has developed a list of unfavorables.

Well, it is going to be hard to hit the budget target, especially when you are unable to control spending like this. This is excessive, it is unnecessary, and it is a waste. We are so concerned about the poor, and yet we allow first-class travel within members of the Cabinet overseas, on the same airplane that is leased by Madonna. That is not the lifestyle that is projected by the administration when they are trying to speak for the poor. It is quite the opposite.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage President Clinton to ask for the resignation of Secretary O'Leary. I would urge him to get back into some honest negotiations on the Federal budget, so that we can enjoy Christmas as a government, get everyone back to work, and also preserve a future for our children, strengthen our economy, and just plain do the right thing. Balancing the budget is the right thing to do.

PRESIDENT RIGHT TO STAND FIRM ON BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Ms. DELAURO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, let me just comment on one thing that the prior speaker mentioned at the beginning of his remarks, and that was that the President was holding out, was hanging tough, whatever phrase you want to use, on the budget, because of the people that he cares about, or the interests that he cares about.

I have got to tell you I am very proud of the President and his holding firm on this budget, because of in fact who he is holding out for, and that is for the folks who are on Medicare, those elderly who are in nursing homes, that get their health care paid for through either in whole or in part by Medicaid, by concerning himself with the environment, and by concerning himself with the working families of this country.

By the same token, Speaker GINGRICH is trying to hold the President hostage on this budget because of the special interests that he has, and I will match the President's commitment to the working people of this country with Mr. GINGRICH holding out for those special interests, those who are going to get the benefits of $245 billion in tax breaks, those richest of American corporations who are going to see a $17 billion windfall with the repeal of the alternate minimum tax.

Last month Speaker GINGRICH shut the Government down. He shut it down, and, in his own words, he shut it down because he did not like his seat on Air Force One. Now he is at it again. This time the Speaker has shut the Government down because he is not getting his way on the budget, even though the overwhelming number of Americans reject Speaker GINGRICH's budget, and I might add, that 60 percent of the American public wanted President Clinton to veto the Gingrich budget because of the issues of Medicare, Medicaid, education, and the environment.

The Speaker is not getting his way on this budget. He would like to cut Medicare, Medicaid, education, and the environment, all to help finance that tax break for the wealthiest Americans. Those may be the Speaker's priorities, but in fact they are not America's priorities. But instead of listening of the American people and fixing this unbalanced budget, the Speaker has chosen to shut the Government down for the second time in a month. His decision to shut the Government down has thrown more than 200,000 people out of work 1 week before the Christmas holidays.

Yesterday my colleague from Virginia, Mr. MORAN, was on the floor, and he put the Government shutdown into human terms that I think everyone who is listening can understand. He said he visited a school in his suburban Washington district where the teachers told him that the children are not enjoying Christmas this year as they have in the past. Why? Because many of their parents are Federal employees who are out of work today, people who want to go to work, people who take on personal responsibility for themselves and their families. They are out of work today, thanks to Speaker GINGRICH. Their parents are fighting more, worried that they will not get paid, and afraid to spend money on the Christmas holiday gifts.

We should not be surprised that Speaker GINGRICH is willing to go to such extreme lengths to get his way if you take a look at what the Speaker said in September about shutting the Government down. This is a quote from the Washington Post on September 22. It says, "I don't care what the price is. I don't care if we have no executive offices and no bonds for 30 days—not at this time. I don't care what the price is."

Quite honestly, that sums up the philosophy of the Speaker. It explains why he is willing to shut down the Government and ruin the holidays for thousands of hard-working families in this country.

This is someone who talks about a budget that is good for our children. What happens to these youngsters who are watching their parents worry about their jobs and what they are going to be able to do in the future? It explains why Speaker GINGRICH's budget cuts health care for the elderly and the poor while providing massive tax breaks for the wealthiest people and corporations in this country.

Believe it or not, this is the same man who last week was named Times "Man of the Year," leaving America to wonder who was the runner up, Ebenezer Scrooge?

BALANCING THE BUDGET IS A MILESTONE FOR AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FOLEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, to respond for a moment to the prior speaker, it is not about ruining the holidays for Federal Government employees, it is about restoring faith in America. It is about people coming to Washington and honoring their commitment to balance the budget.

It is interesting when we have votes on the board whether Democrats and Republicans will seek to balance the budget. Overwhelmingly, both parties join in saying, yes, we want a balanced budget. The President wants a balanced budget. He said it many times.

In reviewing the document that the President submitted to this Congress, the only difference is that it incurs hundreds of billions of dollars of budget deficits for the next 7 years. That is not balancing a budget. Maybe in Washington spending $115 billion more than we have next year is balancing a budget, but in real America, in the real business community that is bankruptcy. That is out of business.

So as we approach the season of Christmas, the Speaker and Members of Congress have committed to staying here as long as it takes. That is not good news for families. It is not good news for anyone that Congress would work in session through Christmas. But I think we must honor the tradition of this House.

When we run for elections we tell voters if they will send us to Congress, that we will do the heavy lifting; that we will bring back a balanced budget and restore fiscal unity and dignity to this Nation. So we cannot just say, oh, well, it is almost Christmas. We have to be home. We have to leave Washington. We cannot be here. We cannot be away from the house, our districts, because certainly the balanced budget can come later.

This is a milestone in our Nation. This is a unique opportunity. As Mr. GINGRICH says, this is gut-check time, whether we have the fortitude to bring down overspending or do we want to just keep playing games.

We have heard the Medicare scam, and many people have talked about it, but we have seen the tapes, we have seen the visuals of Mr. and Mrs. Clinton saying we should bring it down to 6 or 7 percent a year. Well, we are doing 7-plus percent a year in Medicare spending per recipient. So it is not a cut. We know that. We have proven that. We will go on to the next issues.

Wasting taxpayers' dollars, though, is legendary around this process. We have appropriators, authorizers, the Committee on the Budget, all working somewhat together and then, at times, apart.

Mr. Speaker, I had an interesting opportunity to kill the gas turbine this year, which was an exciting year for me and an exciting project for me, because it had spent hundreds of millions of dollars a year. Always killed in the Senate, denounced by three Presidents, but here in the House it survived year after year. We killed it here in the House, went over to the Senate and killed it there, and, finally, the gas turbine no longer finds its way into our budget. The same Government that had the Department of Defense procurement system paying $450 for a hammer.

We just heard from one of my colleagues, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TIAHRT], talking about Secretary O'Leary's trips. As I recall, we started the Department of Energy during the Carter administration because we had a gas shortage, a crisis, and they wanted to make certain that the thermostats would stay at 78 degrees. Now we are traveling the globe trying to seek out whatever we are trying to look for and spending hundreds of millions of dollars to do it.

I think the Cabinet Secretary needs to reexamine her priorities, reexamine why the Department was created and show some leadership and some frugality and not spend the taxpayers' money as if she is, in fact, a corporate executive on the shareholders' nickel.

Yes, Congress has failed to act. Many people look back at the Reagan years and say, oh, it is Reagan's fault for running up massive deficits. Hey, the buck stops here in Congress, folks. The buck stops here in Congress. The Congress are the appropriators. They are the authorizers. They are the check writers. They are the fiscal clearinghouse for this Nation. So Congress has to accept the responsibilities.

The President submits a budget, and we have sure seen his. It does not look like it is going to reduce the debt, but, no, he gets a chance to submit it and he gets a chance to veto, which he has done.

I was proud today, Mr. Speaker, when we came to the securities legislation, that a number of our colleagues, both Democrats and Republicans, overrode his veto. We are sending him a message that it is time to start working and stop vetoing messages and then sending hollow bills back to this floor suggesting he is committed to deficit reduction.

We have a lot of problems in America and we have a lot of problems we can solve together, and I think there has been a great bipartisan spirit on a number of issues. But I do think it is time for all of us to end the charade, end the political games, end the characterizations and assaults against the Speaker, and on both sides of the aisle. The Republicans do not need to fire missiles over to the Democrats, and I think the Democrats need to cease and desist.

Mr. Speaker, I listened to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] talk about the exonerations of the Clintons. The same thing is happening to the Speaker on the numerous charges being filed by the other side of the aisle, in order to tie up the process, in order to try to impugn his reputation and trying to do a number of things.

So I think if this Congress is serious about Christmas, about the holidays, and about the future of this Nation, that we will put aside personalities and get down to balancing the budget initiative, and we will work on it successfully, like we should. We have all voted for it, we have all supported it, and now let us do the heavy lifting and provide the leadership necessary in order to pass it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MILLER of California., Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to exchange special order times with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUPAK].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COBLE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

FRESHMEN REPUBLICANS DO NOT CARE ABOUT FAMILY VALUES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker said that this was not about ruining the holidays for the families of Federal employees; that that really was not important and what was important was a balanced budget.

I think that that shows such incredible lack of respect for those families, for their relationships with their children at a time of the holidays, for their religious beliefs. I think it shows such an incredible lack of respect for our families and our religious beliefs. This is more than shopping days. This is a religious holiday. It is a time when we gather with our families and we think of our fortunes and our misfortunes, and we take stock of the year we have and the year we look forward to and we pay respect to our God.

The suggestion somehow is that that can all be held ransom, that can be held ransom and somehow that will make the negotiations more serious; that, apparently, the Speaker of the House of Representatives is incapable of negotiating unless he has a hostage. He shut down the Government a month ago because the President of the United States would not talk to him. Now he is shutting down the Government because the President is talking to him.

Last night the President agreed to sit down with Senator DOLE and with Speaker GINGRICH, they would roll up their sleeves and they would negotiate a balanced budget that would be scored, the numbers would be guaranteed so it truly came into balance by the Congressional Budget Office.

They walked out of that office with that agreement: and, apparently, the Speaker brought that back to the Hill and the freshmen Republicans told him, no; that that was not good enough to release the Federal hostages; that that was not good enough to let people enjoy Christmas; and that was not good enough to put people back to work.

Maybe we were wrong. I assume that the President assumed that when the Speaker said he wanted to negotiate vis-a-vis the President, that he assumed he had the authority to negotiate. The President was speaking for the Presidency, the executive branch and the people he represents. Senator DOLE seemed to think he was representing the people in the Senate from the Republican Party. Apparently, the Speaker did not have negotiating authority from the freshmen in the House of Representatives.

So apparently, the Government will remain shut down through Christmas. We will or will not be here through Christmas, and families will have to go through that kind of trauma. It is terribly unfortunate, but it shows such a basic flaw in all of the rhetoric and all of the debate and all of the hot air from the Republicans about family values, about the importance of families, about how this was going to be a Congress that took that into consideration when we recognize the importance of the Christmas season to our families.

Now, what is the debate about? The debate, apparently, is that the freshmen Republicans told the Speaker there will be no give on the $245 billion tax cut; that that was sacred to their sense of a balanced budget. So at the time that we are cutting the seniors' health care benefits, at a time that we are limiting the amount of money to be made available for the elderly in nursing homes, at a time that we are cutting back on health care benefits and abolishing the Medicaid Program for children, for poor women in this country, the first time that we have put children back into poverty instead of lifting them out of poverty, at a time that we are cutting back on access to student loans and increasing the cost of education, at a time that we are making those fundamental changes and cutbacks that affect every family in America, the bottom line for the Republicans is that if they do not get the tax cut for the wealthy in this country, if they do not get that, then there can be no negotiations.

To hold on to that position, they have decided, for the second time, to take hostages from the Federal work force. This is a little bit like a family that sits down, as we must do to balance a budget, and decides that they will only go to the show once a week, they will not eat out any longer, they will drive the car for a longer period of time, they will not buy a new house, they will take an extra job, maybe the kids will have to work, but then, all of a sudden, they turn around and say, but we are going to give the children a raise in their allowance.

We do not have the money for this tax cut. We do not have the $245 billion when we are cutting $270 billion out of seniors' health care and $180 billion out of Medicaid. I think the freshmen Republicans ought to quit being so selfish and start thinking about America's families and families that need their help.

A BALANCED BUDGET IS THE MOST SERIOUS CRISIS OF THIS GENERATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MCINNIS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, we need a Government that keeps on ticking, but we do not need a Government that keeps on giving. This balanced budget is the most serious crisis of this generation. There is not a family in America that finds themselves in a situation where they spend more money than they bring in that they do not call it a crisis. There is not a family in America that if they got themselves into the same kind of situation as this Government, spending more than they bring in, would not sit down at a table and say, you know something, somewhere we are going to have to reduce the amount of money that we are spending.

Our problem back here in Washington, DC, by the way, is not a lack of money. We have plenty of money in Washington. We have twice as much as we did 10 years ago. Our problem back here in the Nation's Capital is spending. We are spending more money than we bring in. Our problem back here is not a lack of taxes. In fact, the average person in this country spends the first 2 hours and 45 minutes of every working day just paying their taxes.

Like an old farmer one time told me, before you put more water in the bucket, you better plug the holes. That is what is happening in this Government. We need to plug the holes. We need to reduce this spending. You cannot tax the American people anymore.

And the American people have every right to expect this Government to conduct its business as we expect them, the constituents, our bosses, to conduct their business.

Mr. Speaker, what will happen if we can balance this budget? First of all, let me tell my colleagues that the President, regardless of all of the rhetoric that goes on, regardless of what the President says right now, I can guarantee my colleagues that this President will be forced to accept a 7-year balanced budget; I can guarantee my colleagues that this President will be forced to have that scored by the Congressional Budget Office; and I can guarantee my colleagues that the President is going to have to address entitlement programs.

Mr. Speaker, if my colleagues think entitlement progarms in this country are run well, ask anybody how well our welfare system is run. Imagine winning $100 million in the lottery and wanting to give $50 million of it to the poor people in this country. Would anyone send that to Washington, DC for distribution to the poor people in this country? Of course they would not. The system is broken, and the President is going to have to be part of the solution in fixing that.

Mr. Speaker, another thing we have got to do is we have got to restore confidence in the American people. How confident can the American people be that business in Washington is changing when we have the Secretary of Energy traveling around the country in one of her jet rides that costs $400,000 just for the jet, taking an entourage of 50 or 60 or 70 staff people with her, having 500 people to handle public relations?

We cannot allow that to go on. How confident can the American people be when we stand by and let that happen? The President should immediately ask for, and the Secretary of Energy should immediately submit, her resignation. We need to look at the scare tactics that are being deployed, and we have heard some of them on this floor today.

Mr. Speaker, we are not ending Medicaid. We are doing it in a different way. We are sending the money to the States and bypassing the bureacruacy in Washington, DC. Medicare is not being eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, if we listened to some of the scare tactics, we would think there will be no more school lunches for kids. That is obviously false. Not one kid who got a lunch this year is going to be denied lunch next year. We would believe that students will not get loans and the senior citizens are going to be thrown out in the street to starve. We would think all of these dramatic things are going to happen.

Mr. Speaker, a year from now, after this President is forced to accept a 7-year balanced budget and after this President is forced to have it scored by the CBO, a year from now we are not going to find any of that having occurred.

In fact, what we are going to find is lower interest rates. We are going to find that the next generation has got this generation paying off its credit card so that we do not send that debt on to the next generation. That debt right now accrues at a rate of $30 million an hour. This next generation is watching our generation overspend the budget by $30 million an hour.

What will we see a year from now? We are going to see that come to an end. We are going to see the U.S. Government in Washington, DC do as 48 States do, and every family in America is expected to do, and that is to balance their budget, to not spend more money than they bring in.

Mr. Speaker, let me say that our issue back here is spending. We are not cutting Medicare; we are reducing the growth of Medicare. The President's proposal, by the way, on Medicare is very similar to ours. If some of these people get up talk about the Republicans and want to use the word "cut," they better talk about their own President.

Mr. Speaker, we need to stop the spending in Washington and we need to control. With that, I would just urge and tell the American people I am positive and optimistic that we will have a balanced budget and all of us, including the next generation and especially the next generation, will be better off for it.

SPEAKER AND HOUSE REPUBLICANS SHOULD NEGOTIATE WITH PRESIDENT AND END GOVERNMENT SHUTDOWN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, the President reached an agreement with the Republican leadership last night, both to begin intensive discussions about how to balance the budget on a rapid timetable and also that the Congress would pass a continuing resolution today to reopen the Government. Evidently, the extreme elements of the House Republicans have rejected this agreement and prevented the Government from reopening today.

Mr. Speaker, the President is committed to balancing the budget in 7 years and doing so in a way that reflects our values and also our priorities: health care, education, the environment, tax fairness. He is prepared to talk with the Republican leaders today, tomorrow, the next day, as long as is necessary to get the job done.

But Congress in the meantime should reopen the Federal Government. We cannot achieve this important goal through threats and ultimatums. The Republicans in Congress have threatened to keep the Government shut down unless the President agrees to deep and unconscionable cuts in Medicare and Medicaid. The President will never give in to these kinds of threats, nor should he.

Mr. Speaker, this country has a responsibility not only to balance the budget, but also to protect our values and our interests as people. We must act in the interest of the 3.3 million veterans who will not receive their benefits checks due December 29 unless the Congress passes a continuing resolution by tomorrow morning.

Our first obligation must be to these people, not to confrontational tactics or extreme agendas. Let me last say this. I believe that if this cannot move forward today, we are in a constitutional crisis. This is the first time in memory that the Speaker of the House and a majority in the House has said that the President's veto, being an extraordinary power, must be met on the side of the majority in Congress if they disagree with that veto, not with a two-thirds majority to override the veto, not with another bill that might gain the President's signature, but with shutting the Government down.

Mr. Speaker, there is no language in the Constitution that says that is what the majority in Congress should do if they are displeased with the veto. The Constitution says we override the veto or we pass another bill that the President may or may not sign.

It is irresponsible, it is unconscionable, it is immoral to have taxpayers' money to pay for services and then to say we are not going to give those services to people or, in the case of veterans, their checks for their pension, because we are in a pique with the President with his priorities on the budget.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe this is happening to our country. In the name of sense, in the name of morality, in the name of logic, in the name of decency, I ask the Republican majority and the Speaker of this House to come to this floor today to pass a continuing resolution, to open this Government back up and to get in a room with the President of the United States and the other leaders in Congress and try to see as hard as we can if we can find a budget for this country for the next year, if not 7 years.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEPHARDT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, the Leader is obviously here, as are many Democrats, ready to work this afternoon. I am advised that unless this Congress, which went into a kind of recess at 2 o'clock eastern time today, unless by 8 o'clock in the morning it has approved a continuing resolution, thousands of veterans in Austin, TX, and I believe you said 3.3 million across the country, people that have served our country, who have put their lives on the line, many of them disabled veterans, will not get their checks on time if that resolution is not passed within just a matter of hours.

Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] know of any reason why those veterans should be asked to sacrifice and should be caught in the middle of all the crisis that is going on here in Washington?

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, there is absolutely no justification for it. It is immoral. It is immoral to say that they will not get their benefits because there is a disagreement between the Congress and the President on a budget. That is not the adult way, the sensible way to handle this disagreement.

GOVERNMENT SHUTDOWN UNNECESSARILY INCONVENIENCES CONSTITUENTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. KAPTUR] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to follow on the remarks of our distinguished minority leader here. This is a serious moment for our country. Our congressional office has now been in receipt of phone calls from constituents who are not able to get their passports processed because of the shutdown of the Government. So, in addition to veterans, whose checks are being threatened at this point because this Congress and this Speaker chooses not to move legislation through this body that will keep the various agencies operating, and not inconveniencing the public during this very busy travel season, it is truly a tragedy what is happening here just to make some sort of political point.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is time for people here to grow up or get out, and to deliver the kind of services to the American public that they expect of us. We have thousands of families across this country who have filed for home mortgages that have a relationship to HUD where they insure and process those mortgages. Mr. Speaker, 20,000 of those a month cannot be processed because of this Government shutdown.

We are inconveniencing the American people from coast to coast. We have tourists all around this country that cannot get into the monuments. Think of when in recent history my colleagues ever remember this happening. This does not need to happen, especially during this very important season of the year when so many people are traveling and expecting the goodwill that this season represents to govern our actions toward others.

YES! TOLEDO WINS IN OVERTIME

Mr. Speaker, I came to the floor this afternoon on a little bit lighter subject, and I would like to say that my good colleague from the State of Nevada has elected not to join me here this afternoon, but I am compelled to rise to tell my colleagues that if they happened to miss the first college bowl game of the 1995 season, they may have missed the best, most historic bowl game of the year.

Mr. Speaker, in the Las Vegas Bowl, the still undefeated University of Toledo Rockets beat the University of Nevada Wolf Pack 40 to 37 in the first overtime game in the history of postseason college football.

It was a close game, as evidenced by the 34 to 34 fourth quarter score sparkling with flashes of offensive brilliance on both sides. But in overtime, Reno's Wolf Pack defense could not withstand the onslaught of Rocket star Wasean Tate's powerful running game. Tate scored a touchdown and the game, as it is often said and this time never more true, was history.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague, the gentlewoman from Nevada [Mrs. VUCANOVICH], for graciously honoring our friendly wager by awarding our team this Nevada Wolf Pack sweatshirt, which I intend to present to the team at an appropriate moment, for it was they who won it fair and square.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Rockets, because I know many of them are listening, and as this particular T-shirt indicates over here, are undefeated champs of the mid-American conference. Our newspaper had a complete front page headline: "Toledo Rockets Win Vegas Bowl." We are so extremely proud of them and their hard work.

Go Rockets and Go Toledo and thank you, Mrs. VUCANOVICH.

NOW IS NOT TIME FOR BUSINESS AS USUAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYWORTH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Speaker and I thank many of our colleagues for joining us here on the floor today.

Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. KAPTUR], and indeed would offer in the spirit of bipartisanship, congratulations to the Toledo Rockets for their great victory. I am sure I am speaking for my colleagues from the great State of Nevada. She was more than happy to supply the Tee-shirt and she is equally proud of the Wolf Pack of Nevada, Reno, even though they came up on the short end of the score.

Mr. Speaker, again, on that bipartisan remark, let me address the remarks of my colleague from Ohio and other remarks in this Chamber earlier today with reference to what is transpiring here in Washington, DC, and indeed throughout the country.

There has been a plea from the other side of the aisle, a request to go back to business as usual. Indeed, this morning, my dear friend from New Jersey, who is also here on the floor, basically said that in his opinion, what is transpiring now is not the way a majority should govern in the United States.

Let me simply offer these thoughts. It is precisely because of business as usual and the constant drumbeat of taxing and spending and spending a little more and making special accommodations and spending more and more and more and more that we never come to grips with the central issue we must confront. And that is we are committing fiscal suicide upon this Nation and upon future generations if we fail to stand now and respond to the clarion call of the American people who say enough is enough. Balance the Federal budget now. Put into place the framework today is that in 7-years time we can have a balanced budget and start to eliminate this national debt that will suffocate generations to come.

There is nothing moral about taking the money from generations still to come simply because they do not have a vote. Good people may disagree, and my good friend from Massachusetts is here on the floor, and I am sure he will get a chance to speak here in a few moments. Good people may disagree on how money may best be spent. But for the executive branch of this Government to walk away from a public commitment and, moreover, a public law, signed 30 days ago by the Chief Executive, committing this Nation, committing this Government as terms of the previous continuing resolution to use the framework of a commitment to a balanced budget in 7 years using the honest numbers of the Congressional Budget Office, but for the President to walk away from that statement, to walk away from that public law is absolutely patently wrong.

Now, others may try to massage the wording, and there may be countervailing philosophies, but the undergirding part of that public law was a commitment to work for a balanced budget within 7 years using the honest, nonpartisan numbers of the Congressional Budget Office.

Are there differences in philosophy? Of course, but there should be no difference on that broad bedrock of principle.

Mr. Speaker, I freely acknowledge that good people can disagree and, indeed, we are here to debate those differences. But surely, certainly the bounds of common decency suggest, that, even though good people may disagree, there should be a basic framework upon which to work out the disagreement. Now this White House and this administration and regrettably some others in this Chamber want to walk away from that basic agreement.

Much is made of the holidays. Much is made of the hardship that many Americans face. But again, Mr. Speaker, the greatest Christmas present that we can give the American people is to make sure that we have a Nation fiscally sane and sound, morally responsible for generations to come, saving the health care system for our grandparents, ensuring fiscal responsibility and no to business as usual, trying to find a way to always tax and spend and spend some more.

TRIBUTE TO AARON FEUERSTEIN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, as we face a kind of conflagration in Washington, a meltdown, a fire storm that seems to be taking place both on the House floor and in Washington in general tonight, the truth is that there was a real fire that took place in the State of Massachusetts last week that I think can act as kind of a moral for all of us in this Chamber to take some advice and some lessons from.

I rise today to pay tribute to a remarkable man in Aaron Feuerstein. Aaron is the owner of the Malden Mills in Methuen, MA. He saw his family business go up in flames last week. Over 2,400 families worked in that company.

Against all odds, Aaron Feuerstein built up a company in Massachusetts that has for the last several decades lost tens of thousands of mill jobs to other countries. Tens of thousands of mill jobs have moved down to the South and have left Massachusetts because of high wages, because of the high cost of energy. But while others were abandoning the State, Aaron Feuerstein was building up the State. He pays union wages. Ron Alman, the head of the International Ladies Garment Workers, has nothing but kind words to say about Mr. Feuerstein.

Mr. Feuerstein, at a time when his company and his life savings were burning, stood and made a commitment to his workers that he would continue to pay them through the Christmas season, would continue to pay them on into next month and committed himself to rebuilding that plant. Maybe the Congress, maybe the President, maybe the House and Democrats and Republicans can learn a little something about Mr. Feuerstein's commitment to this country, to his community.

This is an individual who employs immigrant workers as well as people that have lived in this country for generations. He has invested in their education. He spent millions of dollars of his own funds to teach people English, to give people job training. He has worked with the Government. It is through that kind of partnership and commitment that he has built up his company. He has made a recommitment to making certain that we in this Nation can have the kind of high wage, high skilled jobs that mean the future of America is going to be safe.

Yet, as that goes on in Methuen and Malden and other parts of the State of Massachusetts, what we see is divisiveness and name calling and a tearing apart of the future of this country. We are saying, as this guy is standing in Boston making certain that his workers, when he has no income, are going to get paid. We are saying, we are going to cut off the workers in this country today.

There should be a lesson that we all take about how we can try to get along, how we can try to make this country grow and prosper in the future by recognizing that these companies do not have to just line their pockets with their profits. We do not have to measure our degree of growth in our country just by how Wall Street does, but we can look at how American workers do and how families do and whether we build up communities. That is what this individual is doing.

That is why I hope that the Congress of the United States would join with me in honoring Aaron Feuerstein and his legacy to the company that he has built, that his workers have helped him build. That means that there is going to be a happy Christmas, a happy Chanukah, a happy holiday season for so many families in Massachusetts that last week looked like they were burned out and had no hope and no future. His commitment means they do have hope, they do have a future, and all of us can learn something from his example.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the gentleman and his words, as one who is not even close to Massachusetts, but I saw it on the news. The gentleman stood up and said: All of my employees are going to continue to receive their wages, even though the plants are not operating, and we are going to start up some of those plants—I think it was—within 30 days.

Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. That is exactly right.

Mr. VOLKMER. Then soon thereafter they were going to be in full production. It is such a positive mode, just the opposite of what we have here today. This is a negative mode that we have here that we are going to reduce the Federal Government. We are going to shut it down if we do not have our way. He did not have his way. He got burned out.

Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. The gentleman is exactly right.

Mr. VOLKMER. I think it is a very good example of the differences in the way we just think about things.

GRANTING OF SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I just wondered if there are others that are waiting to be heard here on the floor. And those of us who are not on the list anymore, I lost my turn, I am willing to wait until all the rest of them are finished.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLKMER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, what we are trying to do, under unanimous consent, is to agree to have alternating speakers, is all.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is just filling in for the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LONGLEY].

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw by reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

BUDGET NEGOTIATIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LINDER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, let me just say that I just came upstairs from a Republican conference meeting, and it was very discouraging. There seems to be a whole lot less progress on this budget than we thought would be there.

This President has said on so many times that he was in favor of a balanced budget. During the campaign it was 5 years. Later it was 10 years, and then 8 years, and then between 7 and 9, and then 9 years, and then 7 years. And last night our leadership believed, and the press reported, that the President was prepared to put his numbers, his specific numbers for spending on the table for discussion using Congressional Budget Office numbers.

Subsequent to that, this morning the Vice President goes live on C-SPAN at the press room of the White House and, when asked that specific question, when will you have a budget, the Vice President responded, well, we will put all the budgets on the table, our OMB-scored budget, the Congress's CBO numbers, and other budgets that may be offered. And under insistent questioning by the media, he was asked, are you going to do what was said last night, put a budget on the table with CBO scoring numbers? And the Vice President said no.

This is very, very discouraging. If we cannot even get in the same rules, play in the game with the same rules, we cannot get to the end of this. Each of us would like to be home with family for Christmas and New Year's and the work that we have to do in our districts during January. But I believe we are prepared to stay through Christmas until this is done, that what we insist happening is that we are going to not go home until we have a balanced budget now.

The interesting thing about this is that we are not all that far apart. For all the talk we have heard about Medicare and gutting Medicare, we wanted to spend in year 7 on Medicare $289 billion. The President wants to spend $294 billion. That is not a large difference. It can be bridged easily.

We want to grow the spending in this budget by 3 percent. The President wants to grow it by 4 percent. We want to use numbers that presume an increase in revenues of 5 percent. The President wants numbers that would presume an increase in revenues of 5.5 percent.

None of these differences are too broad to sit down at the table and just cut a deal and go home with their families for the holidays. No, this is not about numbers. This is not about numbers. This is about a basic philosophy, because we believe and have believed all year that Medicaid and welfare can be handled more efficiently and more effectively by the States. So do the Governors, including many of the Democrat Governors.

We want to take that money that we have been spending and turn it back to the States for them to handle in the community person to person, face to face. We think that welfare and Medicaid ought to be more in the form of caring than caretaking. The President disagrees. This is all about who decides, who chooses on behalf of others, who sets the power.

In 1958, John Kenneth Galbraith published a book entitled The Affluent Society. I always thought it was ironic that 7 years after he published a book entitled The Affluent Society, he enlisted in the War on Poverty. But in his book in 1958, the entire book was essentially this. It is not that Americans have too little or they have too much. But they make bad choices with their dollars. And it is the obligation of an educated government to tax those dollars from them and make better choices on their behalf.

I submit that is what the issue is about.

The first 2 years of the administration the budget, welfare, health care, virtually everything proposed, was for more taxes, more Federal bureaucracy, more deciding on behalf of the American citizens. Indeed Mrs. Clinton said in the house of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] one evening, "We have an obligation to make better choices on our citizens' behalf."

That is what it is about, the left versus the right. The left thinks that we should decide for the future and shape a future that our children and grandchildren will be secure in; it will be fair and warm. The right says if you gave us every lever of governance tomorrow, we would not have the slightest idea of what to do. I could not satisfy 10 percent of the Members of this House because we all come to the table with different hopes, and dreams, and aspirations.

I do know this: I could build a future that my daughter would love and my son would hate. So our side says return those choices to the people, let them keep more of the dollars in their pockets, and 260 million Americans acting in their own behalf hundreds of times every day will shape the future, and it will be one with which most of them will be happy, Mr. Speaker.

This is not about money. It is about the direction in the country. It is very serious, and I am prepared to stay here until we are done.

STOP THE REVOLUTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WATERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, and Members, we just heard from the minority leader that the negotiations have broken down, that the talks, rather, that were going on to try and get this Government going have broken down. I was hopeful, but I guess I am not surprised. I am not surprised because I have kept up and watched very carefully what has been going on, and I suppose, as I thought about this, I was reminded that Speaker NEWT GINGRICH said he is a revolutionary and this is a revolution, and I suppose Speaker GINGRICH is leading a revolution, and in order to do that you must disrupt, you must block, you must impede, you must deny, you must do whatever is necessary—I guess by any means necessary—you must even take extreme means to keep anything from happening. I guess that is what revolution is all about.

It is unfortunate that the Speaker has decided to lead this revolution against the American people. Government, for all intents and purposes, has stopped. It is closed down. We cannot get a continuing resolution because the revolutionary has stopped everything.

Now I was led to believe that there were some agreements. Now, if you will recall, we got a continuing resolution that carried us up until December 15. How did they get that? They got that because there were some agreements. They got together, and the revolutionary said, "Mr. President, if you will agree to a 7-year balanced budget and CBO numbers, then we can talk," and the President, in order to get a continuing resolution so that we could keep going, we could keep Government open and get on with the negotiations, essentially agreed to that. So that is off the table, that is already agreed to, a 7-year balanced budget and CBO numbers.

So what is stopping the negotiations?

The revolutionary GINGRICH also agreed that he would recognize and respect our priorities. The President said to him, "I cannot allow you to dismantle Medicare, I cannot allow you to gut Medicaid, I cannot allow you to do away with education in this country, and we must, we must, protect the environment."

And the revolutionary, NEWT GINGRICH, said, "All right, we will respect that."

So, Mr. Speaker, they came together and agreed on those basic principles in order to get to the negotiation table.

Now revolutionary NEWT GINGRICH is saying, "Unless you agree to gut Medicare and Medicaid, I don't want to play, I don't want to negotiate," and so we are past December 15 now, the Government is closed down, we cannot get a continuing resolution, and the revolutionary will not go back to the negotiating table.

That is where we are, my colleagues. That is what it is all about. I am convinced that this really is a revolution; I just did not think it would be so extreme. I never dreamed, not in my wildest imagination did I dream, that revolutionary NEWT GINGRICH would be willing to stop this country dead in its tracks in order to prove that he is a revolutionary.

So I suppose, when the veterans do not get their paychecks, when people cannot use their public parks, I suppose when people cannot get passports, when all of this is taking place, that revolutionary NEWT GINGRICH is willing to sit here and say, "That's all right, I want my way."

We have seen some of the actions of the revolutionary in the past, and we know that the revolutionary gets very upset when he does not have his way. If you can recall what happened just a few weeks ago when there was a plane that went to a most important funeral in Israel, and the revolutionary could not have his way, he came back, he pouted, he made statements, he went on and on and on.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the revolutionary will stop this revolution on the people and allow Government to work.

BALANCING THE BUDGET IS THE MOST IMPORTANT THING WE CAN DO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TORKILDSEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TORKILDSEN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the chance to talk a little bit. I want to applaud my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], who was here a few minutes ago when he talked about Aaron Feuerstein who runs and owns the Malden Mills in Methuen, the factory that very tragically burnt down and literally hundreds of people, thousands of people were left without a job. Several people lost their lives in that fire, and Mr. Feuerstein very generously, first, committed to rebuild the factory in Massachusetts; second, the next day told employees that they would be paid for at least 30 days and also that their health insurance would be continued for at least 90 days, and in the holiday season everyone in Massachusetts appreciated that. Even though the factory is not in my district, many of my constituents work in that factory because it neighbors the Sixth District of Massachusetts, and I just wanted to, first, applaud Mr. Feuerstein for what he has done. I have not met him personally, but I have called to congratulate him and offer assistance, and I think it is something that all of us nationally do across the country. Any time there is a tragedy like that, we all pull together.

I would disagree with my colleague from Massachusetts though in just what enables a very generous employer to do what was done in this particular case. In the case of the United States we have had a deficit in this country now for 26 consecutive years. If any company had run a deficit for 26 consecutive years, they could not have offered employees pay for 30 days, they probably would not even be in business. And so the situation for the United States of America is something that we have to address because instead of a one-time immediate calamity, the calamity for the United States has been a long time in coming and will not be resolved overnight.

I give people the analogy of the situation with the debt in the United States and why it is so important to balance the budget. I compare it to someone's personal finances. Imagine that you had four credit cards and you had charged the maximum amount you could on each of those four credit cards. Well, if you wanted to go and make payments, you would hope to pay down the balance, but if you, instead of doing that, you went out and applied for a fifth credit card so you could start paying the other four credit cards, it would not take someone long to figure out that indeed it would be a very quick amount of time before that fifth card was also run up and, indeed, the debt would be much, much worse.

That is very close to the situation where the United States is right now. It has borrowed and borrowed and borrowed. Now the debt is officially just below $5 trillion, but if you add all the money that has been promised to Social Security recipients and others, the debt is even larger than that, and at some point there will not be enough money to make all those commitments which have been made, those things which are called mandatory spending, and that is why it is so important that now we take steps necessary to have a balanced budget. I am someone who believes that we could not do it in 1 year; I mean even that would be too drastic, and that is why a 7-year plan is very reasonable. If we can do it in 5, all the better, but a 7-year plan certainly would be very, very positive.

Now we are in a situation now where we are debating the 7-year balanced budget, and not too long ago we thought we had an agreement between the White House and Congress that we would use Congressional Budget Office numbers, that we would protect certain things like Medicare, education, the environment, provide for an adequate defense, provide for fair tax policy for working families, and even though we thought we had that agreement, the White House did not respond with Congressional Budget Office numbers, and instead came back and said, well, no we have what is called a rosy scenario, we think everything is going to be better. Indeed when you cannot even agree on the parameters, it is very difficult to have negotiations if one side comes to the table with apples and the other side comes to the table with oranges, and you cannot figure out why you cannot have any type of negotiation. I think it is probably because the two sides have come to the table with different measures of what they are talking about.

That is why I think that resolution, the continuing resolution we have voted for, was so important, and I would call on the White House to go back to its agreement and say please live up to your agreement. If you do not like the budget that passed the House and Senate, and that is your option, please submit your own balanced budget using the same estimates. If you do not want any tax cut, take the tax cut out. If you do not want any defense spending, take defense spending out. If you want a lower amount of defense spending, put in a lower amount of defense spending. But please submit your own balanced budget so we can have a comparison and we can actually have legitimate negotiations.

Now a lot of people say, well, the Government shut down at least some departments; is that not the fault of the Congress? Well, the President was sent the appropriations bill for the Interior Department, and he vetoed that. That was his option, but if he had signed it, the Interior Department would be open now. The President would sign the appropriations bill that covered the Veterans Administration. If he had signed that, the VA would be opened now. He choose to veto it. The President was sent the appropriations bill for Housing and Urban Development. He vetoed that bill as well, and HUD remains closed. He was sent the appropriations bill for the Commerce Department. He vetoed that bill, and Commerce is closed. Also with the Department of Justice and the Department of State.

I would call on the President to submit an honest balanced budget so we can balance the budget for our children's future. That is the most important thing we can do.

HOLIDAY SPIRIT IN THE CONGRESS; WHERE IS IT?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. CLAYTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I would remind our colleagues in the spirit of Christmas and the observation of Hanukkah there are certain words or feelings that come to us. There are feelings of joy. In fact, the whole religious experience of being a Christian is the advent, is the spirit of expectation, looking forward to something. Also we have feeling of caring and feeling of responsibility, feeling of families and friends. I would just ask you, what joy is there to the more than 250,000 Federal employees who we are holding hostage this Christmas because of our failure to pass budgets? Why should we make them victims of the fight that we have going on? Certainly does not seem to be in the spirit of Christmas, it certainly is not consistent with religious feelings of that.

In terms of responsibility, who is responsible for the situation? One would say that, well, the President is the only one standing between American people and a balanced budget. Truth be known, as far as the shutdown, it is Congress' responsibility. On October 1 we were to have a budget, and we did not have that budget reconciliation. It is our fault because we could not come to that.

What is this debate about?

What is this debate about? It certainly is not about what the Republicans will say over and over again: "It is about balancing the budget, about balancing the budget in 7 years." It could not be about that because the majority have already agreed upon that.

Why do they repeat that? Simply to confuse or to persuade the American people that the debate is not about real issues, is not about who wins and who loses, it is not about our commitment to compassion, it is not about whether the wealthy succeed at the expense of the poor. It is not about our lack of commitment or commitment to the environment or education. They would rather have you think of this principle that they are willing to die on the sword for and say, "We promise, now, and we are going to keep our promise, come hell or high water."

What they are saying to you, Americans, is that "We will allow you to die on the sword. So we get our provision, or what we perceive to be, we are willing to allow 250,000 employees to have no Christmas." That is what they are saying. They are not standing up for principle. They are saying, "It is my way or no way." No compassion in that position, and certainly nothing to be lofty about.

This whole idea that a balanced budget is sacrosanct escapes me. A balanced budget is because it makes sense to balance the budget, but we balance the budget how? I was told if I want to make a good living, I want to be honorable. I can make a living several ways, but I would rather do it in an honest way. It is as important how we balance the budget as to balance the budget.

It is important in my sight if those Americans who are senior citizens have the opportunity at the end of their lives to make sure that they are not frustrated and in pain because of lack of health care. It is important in my life to think that I would like to prepare for the future, and the future means we want to invest in education. I hear my colleagues get up and say, "You know, I want my grandkids to grow up in a society where they do not have to pay all of this debt."

I have three grandkids too. I want my three grandkids to grow up so they do not have to pay for a lot of debt, too, but I also want my grandkids and other peoples' grandkids—I happen to be privileged, and have been not because I came to Congress, but because I just happened to be, but I know there are those who are not. America is not just great because of its defense, its technology. America is also great because it makes a place for those who are least among us. We are also great because we have a sense of compassion.

I would say to you, I do not know a better time to show compassion other than in the Christmas season. Surely, there is no compassion in closing down Government. Veterans may not get their checks, welfare mothers may not get their checks. Surely there isn't any compassion with those Federal workers who will not know whether, indeed, they will be paid.

I think, Mr. Speaker, our colleagues need to know the spirit of Christmas is the spirit of joy, caring, and responsibility. We have been ill responsible, and I certainly know we have not been compassionate.

THE SPIRIT OF GIVING, AND THE DIFFICULTY IN MAKING TOUGH BUDGET DECISIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COBLE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is a season to be very conscious of giving and what we can do for other people. It seems to me that the President and some of the Democrats feel they are gaining politically by calling Republicans mean-spirited in their efforts to whether we are going to reduce the growth of Government and end up with a balanced budget. It is easy for the President, I think, and some of the Democrats to say they want a balanced budget, but it is hard to come up with the specific cuts and reductions in growth that are necessary to achieve that balanced budget.

If we are going to give a present, it seems very, very important that we start considering the tremendous obligations that we are putting on our kids and our grandkids by spending the money today to satisfy what we consider our today's problems with money they have not even earned yet, so we are obligating them to pay our today's bills. I think all of us, collectively, must believe that their problems are going to be as difficult and as great as our problems today, if not greater.

It seems to me that there are two things that are going to have to happen before we can break this budget impasse: First, the President is going to have to stop playing politics, and doing what is right for the future of our country. I think that is sort of what he is doing. He sees his poll numbers gaining by saying, "No, I am not going to allow these cuts."

I think here is the other second option, that the American people spend some really tough, hard studying time learning about the budget of the U.S. Government, and what it is really doing to their future, what it is doing to their future standard of living, what it is doing to their obligation they are going to have when they start paying off this debt.

Mr. Speaker, it has been politically damaging to many Republicans to go home, because the PR battle has probably, there has been greater success on the part of the Democrats in saying that, "Look, Republicans are taking away school lunches, they are going to put poor people out on the streets," and so when we go home, it is politically damaging.

Let me tell you, Democrats, Mr. President, if we do not succeed this go-around in achieving a balanced budget and start living within our means, my guess is there are not going to be politicians willing to even try it again for the next 15 or 20 years. It is not easy. On the other hand, it is so easy for the President and some of the Democrats to say, "Look at these mean-spirited Republicans as they try cutting this program and cutting that program and reducing the growth in this other program." It is not politically easy to reduce the growth in Government.

The bottom line is this: We either do it now, or we are going to wait until the baby boomers start retiring, around 2011 to 2019. Then we are going to have to do it. If we wait that long to make these decisions, those decisions are going to be drastic.

Let me just give you one example that sort of puts it in perspective, the difficulty of making these decisions. If it was easy, we would have made the decisions a long time ago. If you go back to after World War II, there were 45 people working for every 1 Social Security retiree recipient. Today there are three people working for every one retiree. People are living longer. The ratio of those working to those retired is becoming greater, and therefore, more difficult to charge more to those working in taxes to pay for some of the benefits of those that are retired. We have increased the FICA tax 29 times in the last 21 years, in either the rate or the base, so we continue to tax those that are working more and more to pay for our overspending.

The interest on the national debt this last year was $320 billion, the interest on the total debt, subject to the debt limit. That is the largest expenditure of the Federal Government. We cannot go on, Mr. Speaker, we cannot continue to overspend and run this country deeper and deeper into debt, and jeopardize the success, the economic success of the future.

Mr. Greenspan, our top banker in this country, came to our Committee on the Budget. He said: "Look, if you guys and gals do it in Congress, if you balance the budget, interest rates will be going down 1½ to 2 percent." Such a dramatic increase in the economy.

Let us do it now. Let us stick to our guns, if we have to stay here every day. I am hoping I am going to spend Christmas Eve and Christmas with my family. Other than that, I say, let us stay here every day, negotiate, get this done, have a budget that balances, and gives our kids and our grandkids a good Christmas present.

THE BUDGET IMPASSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GEJDENSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of issues that I think need to be focused in on. The first is that the outlays in this year's budget are virtually the same between the President's budget and the Republican Congress' budget. Would the gentleman agree with that? The gentleman agrees with that. So what we are doing is we are shutting down Government on no difference; a 7-year difference, but in the meantime, we are causing injury to American citizens.

On the other hand, what we could simply do is what we have done in the past, to say "Government will continue to operate even at a lower figure than either the Republicans or the President has asked for, and we will continue to negotiate."

Why are we having this impasse? The impasse is because the Republicans believe that they cannot give up their tax break; that everything else ought to be discussed: that student loans for kids ought to be cut, or worse than ought to be cut. On student loans, their proposal shifts billions of dollars to bankers, and makes it harder for kids to go to school by ending the direct loan program.

They say that seniors ought to pay more for health care; that poor people get no health care at all, possibly; that seniors get thrown out of nursing homes; that the environment is degraded. But let me tell you something; one thing they will not talk about is why we cannot shrink the tax break for billionaires.

Mr. Speaker, $245 billion in tax breaks, that is what is holding this process up. The difference between having people go to work and people not working is whether or not the tax break is sacrosanct. Mr. Speaker, what is going to happen here? Some 3.3 million veterans who have their checks due on December 29 may not get them. We are having problems in the Northeast with cold weather and snow. Programs that help the needy are going to be cut and stopped so that the greediest among us can be benefited.

Let us think about how you run a family. If you have a family and there is a crisis, you call the family together. You do not tell the kids they are not eating for a week until mom and dad can get together on a decision. You sit down and you start talking and you talk until there is a solution, but you also do not say "Well, our youngest son just got married. He has a mortgage, he is in trouble. We are going to cut him. Our two other kids in college, we are pulling them out. Our oldest kid is in Beverly Hills, living in a $10 million mansion. Do you know what we are going to do? We are going to send that child a little extra money." That is not how you run a family, that is not how you run a business. The responsibilities that we have in this institution are not simply to take our ball and go home if we do not get it our way.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEJDENSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My understanding is that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] say everything is on the negotiating table except a true, real balanced budget in 7 years.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, what we have seen is that the one place your side has refused to budge on is the tax break. We have even said, bring the tax break down to working families. Get rid of the guys at the top, the people who make $200,000, $300,000 a year, and then we are closer. "No, we want to protect them," is what the Republicans say.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEJDENSON. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I say to my friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], you had an opportunity to do that yesterday. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM], who has been the most outspoken advocate of a balanced budget on this floor in either party, I suggest to you, and in fact it was the Stenholm constitutional amendment that passed this House this year, as the gentleman knows who got up on the floor yesterday and said, "Let us defeat the previous question, put the coalition budget on the floor with an open rule."

The coalition budget, as you know, cuts more money than the Republican budget that we passed. It has less of a deficit. Next year, the year after, as a matter of fact, as you know, your budget has a very substantial deficit in the first 2 years. It does not cut taxes. It preserves, as the President has indicated, Medicare and Medicaid at numbers that the President, I believe, could sign. It is a cut, as you know, substantial, more than some on my side could support, but the fact of the matter is every Republican Member voted against allowing that on this floor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is not true. Some Republicans voted for it. Only 60-some Democrats voted for it.

Mr. HOYER. I stand corrected, it was four.

UNINTERRUPTED NEGOTIATIONS FOR BALANCED BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, earlier this afternoon the House Republican Conference passed by a unanimous majority a resolution calling on Speaker GINGRICH and Leader DOLE to proceed with uninterrupted negotiations until this budget matter is resolved.

I would like to be home with my family, as I am sure all of you would, but I think there are some matters that take precedence from time to time, and in this case in a historic time, over matters of personal interest. This is a matter of personal interest to many Americans across the country.

Now, when we talk about the national debt and that it is $5 trillion, it is kind of easy for people's eyes to glaze over because none of us can relate to a sum of money that is that large. So sometimes we say, well, if you divided it by 280 million, you could see how much that is for each man, woman, and child in the country. Of course, that number of $18,000 for each of us, our share of the responsibility; but that is somewhere off somewhere else, and we do not have to worry about it immediately.

I would say to all of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, it is important to stay here and keep these negotiations going, which I am convinced we are going to do, because April 15 comes around every year, and look at it this way: If you went to the bank or if I went to the bank to get a loan and, let us say, I borrowed $18,000 and the bank was kind enough to make that loan to me, they would charge me interest, and that interest probably would be in the neighborhood of 6 or 7 or 8 percent, depending on conditions at the time. And that would cost me, if it were 7 percent, that would cost me $1,260 a year as an individual in interest.

Now, I would submit to you that when America's families sit down at the kitchen table and fill out their income tax forms each year, they write a check for the interest on $18,000, which is probably about 7 percent, and send the check for each member of the family for $1,260 to Washington, DC, so that we can pay our interest on the national debt. So it is something that families relate to, and it is something that has a monetary pocketbook-type importance to American families.

Recently the Joint Economic Committee did a report, and published it, on further costs to the American family. This chart represents the cost of not balancing the budget to each American family for things other than interest on the national debt, an additional $2,308. Let me just suggest how we got to that figure.

Most families have a mortgage on their house; not everybody, but most families have a mortgage on their house. It would not be unusual today to have a mortgage for, say, $100,000. The economists tell us that the interest on mortgage rates would be reduced by about 2.2 percent a year, in other words, coming down from an average of about 8 percent to about 6 percent; and that would be pretty neat, amounting to a savings of $1,456 a year for a family. That is not bad by anybody's standards.

It is not unusual also for middle-class families to have students in school, and it is not unusual for them to have a loan to send that student to school. If we got that interest rate reduction because we balanced the budget, families would save an additional $50 a year.

It is not unusual for families to have car loans, either; $15,000 would be a modest car loan today, and if we got that 2 percent reduction in interest because we balanced the budget, the family would save an additional $108 a year.

Now, part of the Republican tax cut package that the Democrats have referred to here as cuts for the rich, part of that package, a substantial part of that package, is a $500-per-child tax credit; and so if our family that we are talking about had one child, they would save an additional $500 because they would get the child deduction.

So all of these things added together, plus what we might anticipate in higher wages and more jobs, which could produce an economic growth which some estimate could be just under $200 a year for this family, another $194, all adding up to over $2,300 a year in savings for the family.

So if we balance the budget and people did not have to send their $1,200 to Washington for each member of the family to pay interest on the national debt, and if we arrived at savings something like this, we would have a very significant savings for each family. That is why it is important to balance the budget. That is why we released this JEC report.

We would be happy to send it out to any Member or anyone else who wants this report, simply by calling my office.

RECESSION LIKELY FOR 1996

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VOLKMER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, it has been interesting to listen to the various speakers today, especially from this side of the aisle, talking about how they are going to balance the budget.

Earlier today we had a gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MCINNIS], and I think it was a slip of the tongue, I hope so, but we will find out what is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tomorrow, and he says that we are going to have about a $200 or $300 billion deficit this year.

Next year, he says, next year, we are going to have a balanced budget. Well, baloney. Next year under the Republican budget, the deficit goes up, it does not go down. This whole idea that they are saying, we want a balanced budget now, I have heard that so many times on this floor: We want a balanced budget now. Baloney.

There is no balanced budget now. They are talking about down the road, and it is all projected; and all kinds of things can happen in that 7 years, and you will not have a balanced budget.

Mr. Speaker, as one who was here in 1981, I can remember another group of people, including former President Reagan saying, under my budget in 4 years, it is going to be balanced. It is going to be balanced. Guess what, folks? Guess what? We had the largest deficit in the history of this country in that fourth year.

Now, all of this yakity-yak, that is all it is, that in 7 years we are going to have a balanced budget, that is a bunch of yak-yak, a bunch of baloney. There is no truth to it at all. They do not know for sure that it is going to be balanced. If we have a recession next year, and I dare say, the way this majority is going under our imperious Speaker, NEWT GINGRICH, the way it is going right now, we could very easily have a recession next year. Because in my opinion, if our President stands where I think he should stand, and the Republicans stay where they say they are going to stay, we are going to hit the debt limit sometime in January, and then we will see what happens to interest rates.

Then we will see what happens on interest rate. Because of activity of this Republican blackmail position of the majority, and that is just what it is, a blackmail position, you could very well end up with a recession this next year.

I will guarantee you, going back in history again, going back and remembering our great President Ronald Reagan, in 1982, folks, I do not know how many of you remember, guess what happened? Because of his tight money policy, because of the Reagan tight money policy, we had a huge, a horrendous recession.

We had parts of this country, including my district, parts of my district, 13 and 14 percent unemployment. Government revenues just went to pot, went way down. Expenditures, because of all of those people being out of work, went up. The deficit went way, real high, and what was the other part of that deficit? Well, remember the old theory that we could really stimulate the economy with a big tax cut? You have heard that again, too. That was Reagan's cause of the big recession.

A guy named Bush, remember him? Back when he was running in 1980, he called it voodoo economics. They are playing the same game all over again. Voodoo economics did not work then; it is not going to work again, and this whole idea that this is all because we are going to help our children at the same time you are going to tell children they cannot eat, they are not going to get enough to eat, the poor kids, the school lunches, the food stamps, we are going to take care of our kids because we are going to balance the budget. That is a pipe dream.

They say, according to their projections they are going to balance the budget. Let us be truthful about it. According to the projections of CBO, you are going to balance the budget in 7 years. Well, folks, you have not taken the time to look at those projections. You need to do that. You need to look at those projections, and if you do not agree with them, like I do not agree with them, and I do not agree with the cuts in Medicare and all of those things, you are not going to have a balanced budget. They are not going to have a balanced budget, but yet they want to shut down the Government.

BALANCED DEBATE GOOD FOR BALANCED BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EWING] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. EWING. Mr. Speaker, I come here to this floor to add a little balance to the debate. The rhetoric that you have heard from the other side of the aisle, I think has been very strong, many times stretching the believability of almost anyone who would be listening. I think the American people can see through this debate.

The last speaker, my good colleague from Missouri, has a selective memory. His selective memory forgot about the Carter administration and double-digit inflation, unemployment, and interest rates. He can go back only a little ways, and of course I would have to defend Ronald Reagan, who had a very liberal, a very spending Congress who certainly never helped to balance the budget.

The time has come to try and balance the budget. We know we have a tough job to do it even in 7 years. But this party, the Republican Party in this Congress is dedicated to doing that.

I want to talk about the shutdown. We have heard some very, very strong words about the shutdown and revolution. Well, many people back in the country do not realize any of Government is shut down, and the part that is shut down, if we look at it, we might say, those employees have the best of all worlds. They will probably get paid and have the week off before Christmas. I do not think that is so mean-spirited to those employees.

Then we have to look at why we have even a partial shutdown of Government. Well, most of it is because the President vetoed the spending bills that we sent to him. He did not like those; they were not spending enough. Very basically, the disagreement between the President's budget and Congress' budget is that we want to spend $3 trillion less over the next 7 years.

We are going to spend more on every program of importance to this country for environment, for education, for senior citizens, for health care, more money, in many cases, a high percentage of increase in the spending.

Why have we not reached a budget then? Why have we not reached an agreement? Well, the White House is too interested in talking about talking. They do not want to talk about anything specific; they only want to talk about how we are going to talk about the specifics if and when we can get to the specifics if the President is in town and if it can be done, and it is on and on like that; and then the President makes an agreement with the leadership, and before they can get back to the Capitol, he sends the Vice President out and reneges on every agreement.

The American people are surprised, I think, about all this talking and no action. They want something to happen, and so does this caucus. And that is why the Republicans have said, no more temporary spending, Mr. President. Come to the table. The budget could be put together before Christmas.

There is only one viable document on the table, and that is the Republican version that we have worked on for months; no one else has one that is so complete, and changes can be made in that. Within 2 days the President and the leadership of this Congress, if they would stay at it continuously, would have a budget and we would be on the road to balancing the budget; we would be on the road to funding social programs in this country, yes, at a higher level, and we would be on the road to a balanced budget.

I do not think that we could give the American people a better Christmas present, if we would put away the cruel, mean-spirited, yes, the rhetoric from the other side, and sit down and start talking about the issues. We are here, we are ready to do that. We will stay ready to do that right through the holiday if necessary, so that we can accomplish what is good for America, and to it at this time of good will, this Christmastime when we all should be thinking not only of our families but what we can do for our neighbors and everyone in our society.

IN MEMORY OF STEVE ROULETTE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COBLE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as Americans celebrate the holiday season with their families and friends, my thoughts turn to the family of a young man in my district in my hometown of Lorain, OH.

This Christmas season will be an especially difficult time for Steven Roulette's family. Steve, a seemingly very healthy 23-year-old, was playing basketball with friends when he collapsed. He died a short time later.

It is always disturbing when a young person dies. In Steve's case it was even more tragic. A native of Lorain, Steve believed in giving back to his community. He worked diligently in my campaign in 1994. Prior to that, he had worked at the Nord Family Foundation that supports social services in Lorain County.

Steve Roulette believed in public service in the best sense of the term. He always had a twinkle in his eye and a passion in his voice when he talked about commitment, when he talked about involvement, when he talked about helping his fellow men and fellow women. He cared deeply about his family and passionately about his community.

So many in Lorain whom Steve's life touched were so saddened by his untimely death. I would like to offer at this Christmas season my sincere condolences to his family. Steve left behind his fiancee Denise, his parents Orah and Kathryn, his stepmother Alice, his brother Alan, and his sister Angela. As a father of two young daughters, I cannot begin to imagine their grief but my thoughts and prayers are with his family and his friends during this holiday season.

WELCOMING A NEW REPUBLICAN, THE BUDGET, AND NATIONAL DEFENSE BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CHAMBLISS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the situation the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] had reference to there, but I commend him for taking the floor to recognize this young man and all our best wishes for this holiday season go out to his family.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to talk on a couple of things here. First of all, I had a very special point of pride today when I received a phone call from my hometown advising me that in spite of all the lambasting of Republicans by folks on the other side, that this morning the sheriff of my county, the Honorable Billy Howell, a two-term Democratic incumbent, switched to the Republican Party.

I commend Sheriff Howell on what I think is a very wise decision for him. I welcome him to the party. He is a good friend, and I know will continue to serve the people of my county in a Republican manner the same as he did in a Democratic manner.

I cannot help but make one quick comment about my good friend, and he is truly my good friend, who serves on the Committee on Agriculture with me, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VOLKMER], who was critical of the Republican budget, saying that our budget is not a balanced budget because it does not balance the budget now. Well, by golly, we could balance the budget now but the best way to do that is to cut out all congressional pay and send all of us home. That would certainly go a long way toward balancing the budget now.

Everybody understands we cannot balance the budget now. We presented a budget that will balance the budget of this country in the year 2002. Everybody knows and understands that, I hope, and I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VOLKMER] will better understand that. He said he has been here since 1981 and frankly that is part of the problem. We have had too many people who have been here too long, who have spent too much money over the years and, by golly, it is just time we stopped spending so much money.

I really got up here, though, to talk about another matter that I am extremely excited about and something that took place on the floor of this House several days ago, and that is the passage of the national defense authorization conference report. The report passed in the House, it also passed in the Senate yesterday, and it is headed to the White House as we speak.

The President has given every indication that he is going to use the same veto pen that he used on several other authorization bills and veto this bill. I hope he changes his mind. I want to encourage him to change his mind, because in my opinion the national defense authorization conference report that we passed in the House, has been passed in the Senate, is a good bill. It is not a perfect bill. There are a lot of ways that perhaps we could improve it. But it is a good bill, and it does a lot of things that are absolutely necessary from the standpoint of the national security of this country that have needed to be done for many years.

First of all, one thing this bill does is give all of our active military personnel a pay raise. Admittedly, it is only 2.4 percent, I wish it could have been 24 percent, but it does give the military personnel of this country an immediate pay raise.

I am very pleased, when I go on the three military bases that are located in my district and have an opportunity to talk to the young men and women, all of whom are volunteers in the military, when I talk to those young men and women and find out that without question they are absolutely the finest young men and women that America has to offer. It gives me a real sense of pride, and I am extremely proud of those young men and women. If anybody deserves a pay raise at this very difficult time in our budget process, it is the men and women in military service.

Right now here we are at Christmastime. Here we are dealing with a very serious crisis in a very cold and distant land called Bosnia, a country which a lot of folks in this country had never heard of before 30 or 60 days ago. We are sending 20,000 of our finest to Bosnia at this time of year. The President has an opportunity to give those folks a very special Christmas present, to say thank you for a job well done. That Christmas present will be a 2.4-percent increase in their pay.

Another thing that this bill does is it provides a 5.2-percent increase in what we call BAQ housing allowance. What BAQ housing allowance is, it is a provision which pays to military personnel a certain amount of money to allow them to rent an apartment or rent a home that is off the military base where they are serving.

If we do not have military housing on base, a lot of times our personnel are required to go off base, and we provide them some money to do that with. It is never enough to fully fund what it costs for an apartment or a house but it does help out. We provide an increase in that. Mr. President, that increase is needed. I urge you to sign it.

Another thing we do is we equalize the retired military COLA's to retired civilian COLA's. That is something that is an extremely important aspect of this bill. Mr. President, I urge you to look at this bill. If for no other reason than from these standpoints, please sign the Defense authorization bill.

THE BUDGET PROCESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

BOSNIA

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, let me pick up where the previous speaker left off in the sense of talking about Bosnia for a second. The first West Virginians are now passing through Fort Dix, NJ, Mr. Speaker, en route to Bosnia.

As Reserve units are called up and others are activated and, of course, active duty, I think it is most likely that we will see a lot of West Virginians going to Bosnia. West Virginians always answer the call. Certainly the C-130 squadrons, the 167th in Martinsburg and the 130th in Charleston, are just about everywhere on the globe anytime there is a problem. They have been to Bosnia as well before.

And so at this Christmas time we need to reflect on what is happening, and as these West Virginia troops pass through Fort Dix and as the others activate or are shipped out.

I voted against the initial military involvement, not because I questioned the good intentions of the policy, and certainly it is well-intentioned, but I questioned whether or not the military would have the ability and means to carry it out.

That question has been answered in an affirmative vote here on the House. The decision has been made. The troops are going, and we must now all stand behind our troops and I am going to make sure they have whatever is necessary to carry out their mission.

I am encouraged by the fact that the rules of engagement for these troops are different than we have seen in Somalia, than we have seen in other areas, where we have now the ability to hit back and hit back hard should our troops be threatened in any way.

But as these troops leave this country, millions of American citizens are asking, what about the other parts of our Government? We know these troops are going to operate efficiently and effectively and carry out their mission. Why are not other parts of Government?

Why do we have parts of our Government shut down? That is a fair question. We are now in our 11th day cumulative this year, the Federal Government or parts of the Federal Government not working. That is an all-time record, I believe, for the Republic, certainly for this century.

There are two parts really that have to be dealt with. Unfortunately the two processes have been brought together by the leadership of this House. One part is the annual budget, what you do to fund the Government on a day-to-day basis for a year at a time, for the fiscal year 1996.

The other part is the budget debate that is taking place in negotiations between the White House and the Republicans and Democrats in the House and the Senate for a 7-year balanced budget. Running the Government day-to-day, one process. Balanced budget, the next. Regrettably, the leadership under Speaker GINGRICH have chosen to tie these two inextricably, and so the Government is held hostage while these important negotiations take place.

So what happens to those who say, well, really are we seeing much of a shutdown in Government? Yes, we are seeing cumulative right now about 60,000 students who will not be able to fill out applications for Pell grants and other student loans as the next semester comes on. We are seeing thousands who had vacation plans turned away.

Well, vacation plans, is that very important? No, but what about people who call the EPA hot line for drinking water violations and want some assurances about the environment? We are finding that those folks are not going to have their calls answered.

When this leadership, the Republican leadership, took over in the spring, I complimented them, not because I agreed with the Contract with America, but I thought that they brought it to the floor in an orderly way and in a very purposeful way and they moved it through quickly. It was not much fun for anybody but they did it. They demonstrated an ability to command the floor.

Unfortunately I have to say, in the same vein, I have seen a total breakdown of that ability in the appropriations process. I recognize this is a complicated area. It sounds like it ought to just be beltway gobbledygook except for this.

The appropriations process is very important. We have 13 appropriation bills that fund the Government on a yearly basis. October 1 is the deadline to get them all passed. We had a handful at best, three or four, that had passed and been signed into law on October 1.

By just this week, I believe we now have seven that have been signed into law. We still have six, and they are fairly big ones, that have not been signed into law. Some of them have not even been taken up by the other body.

I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN], a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DURBIN. I would like to report to my colleague from West Virginia that I just left the conference committee on the District of Columbia. The gentleman would not believe what is going on there.

The Republicans have failed to enact the District of Columbia appropriations bill which was due October 1. We are now almost 3 months into this fiscal year. The District of Columbia Government, their local funds as well as Federal funds, are all appropriated funds, so this government is literally running without authority.

In providing police protection, they are trying to keep the streets safe for us to drive on, they are trying to keep the community as safe as they can for the tourists who are visiting Washington, and some of my colleagues who have just joined me on the floor here from the State of Georgia as well as from the State of Wisconsin blame President Clinton for this. They said the President is responsible, and yet the fact is we have not sent the appropriation bill to the President, almost 3 months into this fiscal year.

A REPUBLICAN VIEW OF THE BUDGET PROCESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SCHIFF] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, I want to take up where the gentleman from West Virginia just left off. That is, when we talk about in the short term why is the Government in this partial shutdown mode, as it has been called, the gentleman is mechanically correct when he explains how our systems work, that a number of agencies are funded through a total of 13 separate appropriations bills, and of those 13 appropriations bills, 7 have been passed by Congress and signed by the President.

Once that occurs, there is no longer a need for a continuing resolution to be passed to keep these agencies open, which is to say the agencies function whether there is or whether there is not a continuing resolution.

However, the gentleman did not mention the fact that with respect to the other six appropriations bills, three of them were passed by the Congress and were just recently vetoed by the President of the United States. The appropriations bill for the Veterans' Administration and independent agencies, for the Department of the Interior and for the Departments of Commerce, State, and Justice, those are contained in three bills that the President vetoed. If the President of the United States had signed the appropriations bills for those agencies, they would be open right now regardless of the impasse over a continuing resolution.

Now, it is important to say that the Democratic side has continually said why does the Congress not do its job and pass appropriations bills, but when we do pass appropriations bills, the President vetoes them.

The gentleman is suggesting that is up to the President of the United States to sign appropriations bills as part of his duties. I do not think they are going to suggest that.

I would like to make the further point, Mr. Speaker, that the President vetoed these bills, these three bills because he felt the amount of spending or other policies within them does not fit his long-term view of where the Government should be going. The President has that prerogative under the Constitution to veto appropriations bills, or any other bills, for that matter. There is a specific procedure in the Constitution for that.

The point I am making is there is no difference, no difference at all, between the President tying long-term policy to his vetoing three appropriations bills which would have reopened those agencies today and the Congress tying the continuing resolution for the rest of the agencies or these agencies, too, without an appropriations bill to Congress' view of a long-term policy for the Government. Both sides are now doing the same thing.

That brings me to the central point of where why I took the floor right now, which is to talk about that long-range policy. Both sides, both the President and the Congress, have said we want to reach a balanced budget, and I hope that goes without saying. The national debt right now is almost $5 trillion that our children and grandchildren will have to pay back someday.

Further, the interest we have to pay on this borrowed money, and we pay interest on money we borrow like any individual would or any business would, the interest we pay is over $200 billion a year. That is more than 10 percent of our current budget.

When I talk about the effect, when I hear talk about the effect of spending on programs, imagine how much we could spend on important programs or allowing tax reductions if we had the use of $200 billion plus a year that taxpayers already send to Washington and, from an economic point of view, we throw out the window because interest buys you nothing. But we have to pay it in order to borrow more, just like anyone else would.

When the Government went through this partial shutdown a month ago, the Government was reopened under an agreement between the President and the Congress that said, among other things, that by the end of the year the parties would reach a balanced budget in 7 years, using the Congressional Budget Office economic projections, although the Congressional Budget Office was expected to, and I believe has, consulted with other agencies and other individuals, and protect certain spending programs. The Congress passed a budget that the Congress believes meets all of those requirements.

Now, I do not agree with every single item and every single choice in that budget. But the Congress as a whole, the majority, believes that it meets the requirements of our agreement of a month ago.

As everyone knows, the President vetoed that budget, vetoed it on the basis it did not adequately protect his spending priorities. Again, that is the President's prerogative.

What the Congress is saying now is, Mr. President, if you believe that the budget we passed does not comply with your priority of spending, show us what your priority of spending is under the terms of an agreement; in other words, put out a budget proposal which is balanced in 7 years and which uses Congressional Budget Office economic projections, and then show us how you would protect your priorities. There is nothing in that that says how the President of the United States has to set spending levels. There is nothing in there that says he has to cut spending for programs or anything else, only that the President of the United States abide by the agreement he made a month ago.

Today the Vice President of the United States said the President refuses to comply with the agreement he made a month ago, and that is why we are at this impasse right now.

THE BUDGET IMPASSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COBLE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, the American public must be very perplexed. In addition, of course, we know that they are very angry and, very frankly, a number of us that sit in this body are very angry.

We began this session with the election of a new leadership. Speaker GINGRICH annoiunced a new order, an order committed to revolutionary change. We have had, to some degree, a revolution. It is not, as so many revolutions are, not a pretty thing to watch.

The Contract With America, which was the plan of this so-called revolution, talked about, in two of its first three items, responsibility, personal responsibility, and fiscal responsibility. Personal responsibility was urged on all Americans to do that which would make their lives better and, consequently, the lives of their families and their communities and their State and Nation better and more productive, more successful.

We have been debating that contract for the last 11 months, and very frankly it has not gone very far. One of the reasons it has not gone very far is because the Republicans in the Senate could not agree with the Republicans in the House. Frankly, the Democrats have not been able to defeat or pass much on their own. We understand that, we are in the minority.

Now we come to funding Government. Personal responsibility would say that each and every one of us ought to share the most efficient and effective operations of the people's Government; reduce it, change it, eliminate some activities, do all of that, but ensure that those activities that we support operate in an efficient and effective manner. The Republican leadership has failed miserably in that effort. Because of Democrats? No. In the first instance, when this fiscal year ended September 30, the Republican leadership had failed to pass any appropriations bills to fund Government. Not 1 of the 13.

My colleague points out that perhaps we passed the legislative bill prior to the first of October, and that was, of course, vetoed because the President thought it unseemly that we take care of ourselves first before we took care of other people's business, and he made a good point.

The Republicans passed a short-term CR that expired, and they had yet to pass the appropriation bills that the President would sign and, indeed, as of today have seven bills that have yet to be passed into law.

Now, ladies and gentleman, we have come to a point where the President, President Clinton, the majority leader BOB DOLE, and the Speaker, NEWT GINGRICH, sat down together at the White House last night and said, "As reasonable people, let us work this out," and the reports I received this morning were that the Speaker thought that was a positive meeting. Senator DOLE, the majority leader, thought that was a reasonable meeting. The President of the United States thought that that was a positive, productive meeting, and the three leaders came out and said, "We think we have a construct to move forward."

And then what happened? The Republican freshmen apparently thought that was not enough. The Republican freshmen want a guarantee that the President would agree to certain things that he believes are not in the best interests of this country, cutting Medicare deeply, cutting Medicaid deeply, cutting education for young people, which he believes, and I share his views is an investment in the future of America, undermining programs that protect our environment.

In point of fact, in the last legislation we passed to keep Government working, both parties agreed that that would be part of it. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the freshmen Republicans have demanded that Government shut down until the President gives up.

That is not right.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, is it out of order that anyone in this 5-minute time be given additional time under unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order speeches extensions of time are not allowed.

Mr. VOLKMER. I thank the Chair.

THE EFFECTS OF THE GOVERNMENT SHUTDOWN ON FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker, there is no good reason why 260,000 Federal employees should be shut out of their jobs, particularly at Christmastime. This is unprecedented to punish Federal employees because they chose to be civil servants. But that is what this body is doing. And to do it at Christmastime, when virtually all of these Federal employees have children, have been looking forward to Christmas, would like to be out shopping after they finish work each day, but they cannot. They do not know whether they will be paid.

They are aware of the press conference that the Speaker had where he alluded to the fact that a great many Republican Members of this body, particularly freshman, are opposed to reimbursing Federal employees for this period of time when they have been locked out of their jobs. Imagine the strain, imagine the anxiety, imagine the sadness on the part of their children when they see the toll this is taking on their parents.

I have been told by teachers, by one of the principals, in fact, of an elementary school in my district where a lot of Federal employees send their children, that their children are not acting like this is Christmas. Normally, you have pageants and children jumping up and down and squealing with laughter and looking forward in anticipation of Santa Claus. But we have stolen their Christmas from them this year, because their parents cannot afford to go out and buy presents. Their parents have no reason to be happy. Their parents do not know what is going to happen to them, because it is in our hands.

We control what this Christmas will be like for these thousands of Federal employees. And it is wrong. It does not have any reason to be tied to a 7-year balanced budget.

You know, you look back at history, when we have had conflicts between the majority in the Congress and the executive branch, when President Reagan had a conflict with the Democratic Congress in 1987, we went the whole year on a continuing resolution. President Reagan never thought of sending Federal employees home and punishing them and locking them out of their job just because he could not agree with the Congress. Certainly, the Democratic Congress never for a moment thought that they would punish Federal employees like that.

In 1988 we had the same situation, a continuing resolution all year. And now we cannot even get a continuing resolution for the 3 days of Christmas, for this Christmas weekend. We cannot even get this continuing resolution to let Federal employees function and to open up the Government.

□ 1645

Why? Because certain Members on the Republican side of the aisle are saying "It is our way or no way." They just passed a resolution, I am told it was unanimous, I cannot believe it was unanimous because there are good people on the Republican side of the aisle, to say that there will not be a continuing resolution unless the President agrees to the entire 7-year balanced budget. It is wrong, it has got to stop, and the American people have to got to say no, this is not what we want from our Government.

AMERICANS SUPPORT PRESIDENT ON BUDGET IMPASSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COBLE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FATTAH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FATTAH. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise as normally when Members ask for an opportunity to revise their remarks and extend them. I would like my remarks to be recorded as I speak them. In this case, because I think that what we need to focus on is the simplest assertion of the truth.

We have a Republican majority that is trying to sell something that no one is buying. The American public has rejected, almost 2 to 1, their budget proposal for this Nation. They offer us on one hand a budget that would cut education, Head Start, Pell Grant opportunities for youngsters to go to college, increase the cost of student loans, and cut teacher training programs.

In every poll that has been done, the American public indicates that they do not agree with this budget. They are trying to sell a budget to the President of the United States, and he has vetoed it. He has said that he will not add his signature, he will not join in a conspiracy to rob this great country of ours from developing its fullest potential. He will not join in attempts to cut millions of young people in terms of their needs, in terms of health care and Medicaid, to further burden senior citizens and their families when they are in need of nursing home care. So, because the Nation and the President have rejected their budget product, they have folded their hands and are now stuck in the same position they started out in, refusing to compromise, refusing to move toward some shared consensus about what direction our budget priorities should be as a country.

The U.S. Constitution is clear, and that is that laws have to be passed by the House and the Senate and signed by the President. I am not proud of the fact that I have been a Member of the least productive Congress in the history of our country in terms of actually passing legislation that moves on to the upper Chamber, or the other body, depending on how you like to phrase it, and then on to the President for his signature.

What we have here is a group of people who are now in the majority that seems to lack the maturity to be productive participants in shaping the course of public policy in our land. So, because their budget product has been rejected by the American people, they have decided to hold hostage 75 percent of the U.S. Government domestic programs.

So we come now on the eve of a holiday season, and many of my colleagues have pleaded for sympathy for Federal workers. I really would hope that we would understand their plight, but I think it is even more a compelling case to feel sympathy for the misguided priorities of the Republican majority. This is a defining moment, I believe, in this Congress. This shows clearly that they do not have what it takes in terms of being able to govern the people's House, to be responsible and reasonable in their actions.

So I would ask that as we reflect upon this moment in time, that we would think clearly about the opportunities that the new year will bring; for the American public to think anew about what type of person they would like to have in the U.S. Congress; to think anew about how we can further develop a more perfect union; to think anew about our responsibilities, as so eloquently outlined in the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution, in the preamble where it says to promote the general welfare, being our essential priority.

We have a lot to be thankful for in this land, and one of the things we have to be thankful for is that there is an election for Congress every 2 years, and that we will arrive at a point in which the American public will hold the trump card, and they will have an opportunity to make choices about what kind of country we really want to be and what kind of Nation we really want to move toward.

I would challenge each of us as we continue our work in this body to try to be more reasonable, to try to accommodate the differences of opinion that truly exist in terms of how to move our country forward, but always to be prepared, even in a moment in which we lack some degree of comfort, to stand firm for what we believe in, to stand up for our principles, and for the democratic majority and for a President who has struggled to try to reason with an unreasonable majority of the Congress. I think we owe President Clinton a great degree of gratitude for his leadership for our Nation in our hour of need.

REASONS FOR THE BUDGET TURMOIL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Texas [Ms. JACKSON-LEE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I think this is an important time in this country. Many of our citizens are turning toward a very spiritual time. Many having been in the midst of celebration of Hanukkah, and others who are looking toward a celebration and commemoration of the birth of Christ.

The value of this Nation is that this holiday will be celebrated differently in many homes across this country. It is the wonderfulness of America, diversity of thought and religion, but a Constitution that applauds differences and recognizes the three branches of government. I think it is important to tell the American people why we are here today, on December 20, 1995, in the midst of turmoil without a budget.

This Congress started on January 4, 1995. I was sworn in as a new freshman, running on the issues of accountability and accessibility, and yes, responsibility, values that I hold very dear and very near to my heart and to my principles, and values that I represent to my constituents at every moment in interacting with them in my district visits.

But what happened to us that time in January and February and March? We were faced with something called a contract. Oh, it is so well for a while, but let me tell you, it was a gimmick. I do not know of any American who can say to me that they engaged and entered into a contract with anyone who was elected to the U.S. Congress.

There was some flag waving on the Capitol steps, and wannabees and others who were running for Congress at that time came up and made some sort of false representations about signing some document. But I would venture to say that even constituents in those districts did not sign any dotted line.

Oh, yes; they might have found exciting some very popular political issues that were raised about tort reform and crime off the streets, bashing the liberals, and other such talk. But that is what it was, it was political gimmickry. And 37 percent of the people voted, so it was not that exciting anyhow.

But we spent 100 days and more in turmoil over the so-called contract, I call it on America. In the meantime, serious health reform did not occur. Many of us came here saying that we could reasonably reform Medicare and Medicaid, not on the backs of senior citizens and children who need immunization and preventive health care, but really sit down to the table of reason and bargaining.

But out of this 100 days came a bashing and elmiminating of the environmental protection laws that most Americans, Republicans and Democrats and Independents, have grown to respect, the Clean Water Act and the Clean Air Act, and then the bashing of Medicare and Medicaid.

We should have had bills passed in April. We should have had all the appropriation bills passed by September or October 1. But what we have now is a quagmire of confusion. Republican proposed block grants which go to States, and when the money runs out and the needs of the people rise up, as we find in the natural disasters that have faced California, Texas, and Florida, among others, that have what we call natural disasters, we would not be prepared to assist those people. Do you think that is reasonable and the American people want that?

We now come to December 20 with no budget. That is what it is, plain and simple, folks. We had a gimmick called a contract. Out of that came one bill that was passed, and we now have no budget. And we have people trying to appropriate away America's values by intimidating us, by saying they stand for what America believes in.

The President, regardless of what your party may be, has an actual constitutional right to engage in this process. He has sat down with the leaders of the House and the Senate, and I might add, if you saw the media accounts, and they sure do reflect accurately many times people's expressions and views, those that came out of the meeting said we are on track.

Today we find out about an extremist position by freshmen Republicans that say all or nothing. We want to take the $270 billion tax cut right now and we will stand on the backs of seniors and children, Medicaid and Medicare, and we do not want to reason. Yet, the President spoke to the leadership and they said we are ready to sit down. Who is leading the leadership at this point? I am a Democratic freshman, and I am not going to let some other guy take the moral high ground on people in my community, Federal employees who give services, children who have sicknesses who need Medicaid. We must come together to recognize political gimmickry goes out the door, leadership stands up, get a budget, open the doors of this Government, right now, today. Pass a clean continuing resolution to open the doors of the Government and engage in budget talks that do not ask for $270 billion out of Medicare and Medicaid simply to give the rich a tax cut.

That is the moral high ground.

ALL OUT OF PATIENCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I must say, in my religion we are in the season of Advent, and on one of these Advent Sundays, we light a patience candle. I fear that patience candle may not even do it for me this year. I have totally lost patience with the extremism of the New Republican freshmen. They appear to have the Speaker on a very short leash. But I am here today, joining the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. JOE KENNEDY, and others, in signing a letter to both Senator DOLE and to our Speaker asking for a Christmas trust in this budget war. Can we please have a Christmas trust for the 3.3 million veterans who went wherever they were sent, whether it was whatever holiday, whatever family situation, they went where they were sent. And I do not think they are going to appreciate figuring out tomorrow morning that if we have not done this Christmas trust for at least those 3.3 million, they are not going to get their checks on time on December 29. That is outrageous. That is why I have no patience.

Everybody knows today is the busiest mail day. People are using the mails to get through their holiday packages. So these checks have got to be in the mail tomorrow if they are going to be timely. And you cannot write checks if you do not have anybody there to be there and put them in.

Now, let me say, in hot wars we have insisted on trusts over Christmas. Why in the world in this budget war can we not get the Republican leadership down here and at least get our veterans out of the crossfire in this stupid little budget tantrum that some of the new Members are having?

I guess I just do not understand who is leading whom. But I think we really look pathetic. Here it is, 5 o'clock in the afternoon, we have not really done anything since 2 o'clock except yap, yap, yap, yap, yap. Yesterday, they named post offices. We have not done anything of substance. We discussed some budget that the President had like 9 months ago that was like a dead dog. Nobody has talked about it since, he has moved way beyond. He has agreed to the 7-year balancing of the budget.

I must say, here is a group of people who cannot even get this year's budget done. Hey, we are three Mondays into the fiscal year, and they cannot get this budget done. Seventy-five percent of the domestic spending has not been done, 25 percent of the way through this year. And what are they arguing about? They are arguing about projections 7 years out. Imagine, any American refusing to pay their bills this year because they have not put their budget together because they do not like the budget projections 7 years out? It will not work, America. It will not work.

And yet somehow people here are caving and allowing it to work on the other side of the aisle.

They have no credibility. If we cannot get this year's budget together, how do we ever anticipate getting to the next 6 years? So I really hope that very soon we can get through to the Republican leadership, that they answer the letter so many of us signed, that we see a Christmas truce, and we at least get our veterans out of the crossfire.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentlewoman that it is my information that within a short period of time, supposedly, the Committee on Rules is supposed to meet and bring forward a continuing resolution just for those people, that they can go to work in order to get those checks out for the veterans.

That is great, but that bothers me.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I agree. The gentleman is absolutely right. We still have students. We have 60,000 students who have theirs to be processed. We can list all those others.

Mr. VOLKMER. Homeowners, trying to get loans from HUD, and everything else. All that will not be done.

What it does is, it tells me that they want to be very political. The majority of the Republicans are very political. They do not want the veterans mad at them, but they do not care about the rest of the people and the Federal workers and everything.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I do not know about the gentleman's veterans, but the veterans in my area did not come to town on a turnip truck. They realized that had a lot of us not signed that letter to them, and pointed out that these veterans were being held hostage and we should at least have a Christmas truce, they would not be going to the Committee on Rules right now. My veterans have figured that out. They are not dumb.

Mr. VOLKMER. If the gentlewoman would further yield, why do we not have a Christmas truce for all the Federal Government?

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I certainly agree. And I think we should have a Christmas truce for students. They did not cause this. They are totally innocent. They could not even vote in these last elections, and we could go on and on. But especially veterans.

The fact they were going to roll right over them, until a lot of us made some noise, is absolutely unbelievable. As I say, I think all of our patience has been tried. Let us hope they hurry up and get this down here, and I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentlewoman for her leadership in this effort.

LET US NOT MAKE THE POOR THE SCAPEGOATS IN BALANCING THE BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POSHARD] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to come to the floor in this special order here. And let me say before I begin any of my remarks that I would consider myself to be a fairly moderate to conservative member of my caucus, as a Democrat.

Mr. Speaker, I have been reading the welfare reform conference report this afternoon, and I wanted to just make a few remarks on it, because I have some concerns about it, frankly, and I wanted to express those concerns to the body.

I favor welfare reform. I know that we have to do certain things to make sure that people exercise their self-responsibility in our society and that Government cannot be the keeper of everyone. I was reading this afternoon, however, and I could not help but think of a time when I was in the State Senate back in Illinois, several years ago, and we were going through a proposal then that I believe the Governor had initiated to cut back on some of the benefits to some of the neediest in our State.

I remember there was a little lady, a nun in the church, who brought a bus load of folks down to Springfield. And they came into our committee room, and we were considering, I believe, at that time perhaps the override of this initiative that was going to cut back funds for these folks. These were all folks that lived in a rundown part of Chicago. They were ragtag. They did not have good clothes. They did not seem to be very clean. Some of them were pretty smelly.

They came into our room, and the little nun who ran the program had some of them come up and testify before our committee about how important it was just to have the extra $10 or $12 or $15 a month to help them survive.

We were all sitting there listening to this, and I think pretty moved by some of the stories that these folks who lived on skid row were telling us. And I remember very specifically there was this one little guy that came up to the testimonial table and began to speak to our committee. He told us about how difficult it was to get through the winter and how he really did not have a place to stay, and he said those few extra bucks that we were taking away from them meant a lot to him. He said, "I like to get a pack of cigarettes every now and then."

The minute he said that, all the air just went out of the committee room. We were all just kind of sitting there waiting on somebody to validate every prejudice we had in our heart against poor people, and he did it for us. He said the wrong thing. I could just feel the tension begin to rise again in the room and members of the committee sitting there and saying, yeah, well, we told you so. Those welfare cheats. That is all they want the money for is so they can buy cigarettes.

I wrote all that down, I remember specifically, because I thought it was such a tragedy. I do not want us to make the same mistake out here in our welfare reform package. The poor among us are really important. They do not have a lot and they only take up a very small part of our budget. If we look at the whole budget, and we consider Medicaid and housing and food stamps and family support, and those sorts of things, it takes up a very small part of our budget. Yet somehow in this country we want to make the poor the scapegoats for all the problems that we are having here with respect to balancing our budget. Let us not do that, please.

I recall a very important scripture where it said in the end time we will all come before the judgment and the Lord will say, "Enter my good and faithful servant. You have been faithful in a few things; I am going to make you master over many." And we will say, "Well, when did I do that?" And it says that He will say, "Well, when you did it unto the least of these, My brother, you did it unto Me. When I was hungry, you gave Me food. When I was without clothes, you clothed Me. When I was thirsty, you gave Me drink. When I was in prison, you visited Me."

That is what is important, too. We should not, any of us here, just because we need to crunch numbers, or because we need to satisfy ourselves that the poor are the cause of our troubles, forget that we have a responsibility to be our brother's keeper.

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN DEMOCRATS AND REPUBLICANS SHOULD REFLECT REALITY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COBLE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I will say to my friend from Illinois, before he leaves the floor, he is one of the most gentle, one of the kindest persons on this floor. And oftentimes when a Member comes to the mike on the floor, Mr. Speaker, it is an advantage to follow someone who is not very popular and who is a scoundrel. I have the unlucky draw today to follow the most gentle Member of the House, but I do that nonetheless.

Mr. Speaker, I did not plan to speak today. As the Speaker knows, I have been in the Chair for the past 3 hours and I have had the benefit of listening to discussions on both sides of the aisle.

My friend from Missouri, Mr. VOLKMER, says what a benefit, and it has been beneficial. Not surprisingly, both sides are subjective, as I am. I am guilty of that. But I want to try to add some balance to this in my brief 5 minutes.

One of my friends who sits here to my left now conveniently remembered some of the bad fiscal times under President Reagan. But as was mentioned subsequent to his speech, he conveniently forgot about the fiscal chaos that occurred in the Carter years. Well, this is only natural, I think. I think it is convenient for Democrats to remember the bad for Republicans, and the Republicans to remember the bad for the Democrats. That is only natural, and that is part of the nature of the beast, but I think when we do it so consistently then we are seeking out a balance that we need to retrieve and bring it back into the realm of discussion.

When I was last home, Mr. Speaker, a woman came to me, one of my constituents, and she said answer a question for me. She said, as best I remember the last time the Government was shut down, prior to this last time, she said it was in 1991. And I think it was, indeed, in 1991. And she said to me, the spin from the media then was that President Bush shut down the Government. And she said, even I blamed him. But she said, now, virtually no one from the media is pointing an accusatory finger to the President. They are saying NEWT GINGRICH or the majority Republican Congress has shut it down.

I am wondering, and I do not want to sound paranoid, Mr. Speaker, but I am wondering, is it convenient to blame a President when he happens to be a Republican and to exonerate a Congress when it happens to be controlled by the Democrats? I am afraid that is the spin that we are taking. What is good for the goose is good for the gander.

Many people today have blamed the Congress for veterans not receiving their checks, if they, in fact, do not receive their checks. President Clinton had every opportunity to sign the appropriations bill into law this week and those checks would have been forthcoming. I cannot for the life of me figure why that would be the fault of the Congress.

Am I missing something, America? As my friend from Ohio says: Wake up, Congress.

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COBLE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the gentleman that very question, if I had missed something.

Correct me if I am wrong, is it not true that the President vetoed three appropriations bills, and that had he signed them, the Government would be up and running again today, right now?

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I know of two. It may well be three. Two comes to my mind. Is it three?

Mr. HOKE. The third was vetoed.

Mr. COBLE. So it is three. So my friends and the viewers who are watching C-SPAN now, let us come back into reality here and let us add balance to this discussion.

Mr. Speaker, as is obvious, I am not prepared, because I am doing this impromptu, but I am grateful for having had this time and I yield back the balance of my time.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITE). Members are reminded to direct their remarks to the Chair and not to the President or the viewing audience.

PRESIDENT SAYS IT IS POSSIBLE TO BALANCE BUDGET BY 2002 AND MEET GOP GOAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOKE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Speaker, I saw this morning in the Baltimore Sun this report, and it was so stunning to me that I just have to read part of it to you, Mr. Speaker. I want to be sure not to offend the gentleman from Texas, and I want to make it clear that I am addressing my remarks to you, Mr. Speaker.

In the paper it says, "In a positive signal, Clinton told reporters before the meeting", this is before yesterday's meeting with Speaker GINGRICH and with Majority Leader DOLE, says "In a positive signal, Clinton told reporters before the meeting that he now thinks it is possible to reach the GOP goal of a balanced budget by 2002 using the conservative economic calculations by CBO."

Let me read that again, Mr. Speaker. It says, "In a positive signal, Clinton told reporters before the meeting that he now thinks it is possible to reach the GOP goal of a balanced budget by 2002 using the conservative economic calculations by CBO." He said this yesterday. At that point, it had been 29 days since he had personally signed his name to a piece of legislation known as a continuing resolution that included the language that said that he agreed to work with the Congress to achieve a CBO-scored balanced budget by 2002 and that he would do this before the end of this term.

Now, here he told reporters yesterday that now he thinks it is possible to reach that goal using CBO numbers. What is going on? Did he not read the legislation that he himself had signed?

Was the President not aware of what he had signed? Did the President not read that paragraph in the continuing resolution that said that he was agreeing to actually come forward with a CBO-scored balanced budget by the year 2002? Did he not read it? Does not he read the legislation he signs?

Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand this. Here he acts with complete surprise that now he is saying that gosh, he thinks it is possible to reach that goal of a balanced budget by the year 2002.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOKE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I keep hearing about CBO and OMB, and they are all projections. No one for a certainty can say what the accurate final result would be. But I would like to inject into the discussion the name of Sister Rosa. He tells the future by reading cards. I think she could do better than OMB and CBO.

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his suggestion.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, she is a lady that does that back in my district.

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I think that maybe Sister Rosa do a better job than CBO or OMB. But the fact remains that the President did not agree in a piece of legislation that he signed into law to take the projections of Sister Rosa. He did not agree to take the projections of the OMB. He agreed to use the projections of the CBO, and then yesterday he acts as though it is a completely novel idea and he says: Gosh, maybe it will be possible to reach that goal. I think maybe we will do that. This is something new. I had not thought about that. I think we can put it all together.

Well, for heaven's sakes, Mr. Speaker, that is what he agreed to 29 years ago. It seems to me that what is really going on here is a stalling tactic. It is an amazing thing. The President thinks that for his own political good that he will do better by putting this off longer and longer and longer and longer.

We see the same thing going on right now with respect to the subpoena on the Whitewater papers in the Committee on the Judiciary or the Whitewater committee over in the Senate. What the President has done is that he has said: I am invoking an attorney-client privilege. He knows there is no good attorney-client privilege on this matter, but he has invoked the attorney-client privilege, knowing that he will spin that one through.

Mr. Speaker, that will take some time, and then he will go to an Executive privilege that he will call up and ask to spin that one through, all the while, delaying, delaying, delaying.

The President seems to think that time is on his side, but the fact is that he did agree to and we will insist on and we will come up with a balanced budget using honest numbers.

BUDGET IMPASSE REQUIRES COMPROMISE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KANJORSKI] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas, Mr. DE LA GARZA.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding briefly to me. The previous speaker, I guess, inadvertently mentioned that the President said that 29 years ago, and he meant 29 days. But the one that introduced a balanced budget amendment 31 years ago was this gentleman from Texas. So it is not new. Everyone is climbing on board now. I did it 31 years ago.

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA] should be commended for that. We appreciate it and we appreciate his support working for a balanced budget now. But the fact remains, we have got this agreement and the President should honor his word. That is all we are saying.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to bring Sister Rosa into the picture. She has got better figures than OMB and CBO.

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I enjoy the fact that we can sit here particularly with the Members of the freshman and sophomore class, and participate in this open discussion. It is worthwhile for those individuals across America who may be bored with Christmas shopping and watching C-SPAN, or perhaps going through some therapy that they are undergoing trying to understand what is going on down here in the asylum.

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that probably for the first time in the history of the United States, we have extreme polarization of positions on the passage of the budget. A lot of people who are not necessarily informed with the process may think that we are indeed insane, or that what the House of Representatives of the Congress or the entire Federal Government is going through right now is a form of insanity, but in reality we all know that it is a very serious thing and it has to do with very honest and real differences of my friends on the Republican side and our side.

Mr. Speaker, if I could just address for a few moments what those differences are and maybe encourage some of my friends on the other side to talk about it.

Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker talked about some contract. Having been a lawyer, particularly having dealt with Philadelphia lawyers, although not claiming to be a Philadelphia lawyer myself, there is a great deal of respect paid to contracts; that supposedly any time we have a contract, that says something that in reality will take place in accordance with the word of the contract, or that that has some superforce above and beyond anything else.

Well, there are several ways to interpret contracts and I think we have to accept that as a given. Very clearly in the situation of the President and whatever contract is interpreted by the majority party of the House, there is a definitely wide distinction as to how they interpret the meaning of what was agreed to some 29 days ago.

Second, just because we have the Contract for America, or on America, I am never sure, but just because we have that, that does not pass the value of the Constitution and how we interpret that, nor does it pass good sense for what we do this year, next year, for the next 7 years of this Republic, and for as long as this Republic endures under this Constitution.

The one certainly that we have is that government in a democracy is very expensive; it takes a great deal of time; it is very inefficient, because there is the necessity that if 250 million people are to exist in this world with different thoughts and philosophies, different political positions, different social positions, and coming from different cultural backgrounds, it takes a requirement of that ugly word which some of my younger friends on the other side of the aisle seem to find a great deal of distaste for and that is the word called "compromise."

I have heard the Speaker talk much earlier, I think maybe as long as 6 months ago, that with the new revolution that occurred in the House of Representatives, that there would be cooperation but not compromise. If my colleagues have extreme views, I do not know how we get to a final solution without compromise.

Mr. Speaker, let me talk about what those extreme views are. We can all write a budget that will balance in 7 years, which is a projection of time with no certainty, all dependent on variables that are so complicated and uncertain in their nature that at best it is a guesstimation. We could arrive at a balanced budget in 7 years under the numbers scored by the CBO, the Office of Management and Budget, Morgan and Stanley, the Harvard Business School, the Wharton School, we could find any number of people who would be willing to score it and we could agree that it should be CBO.

FEDERAL WORKERS UNFAIRLY BURDENED BY BUDGET IMPASSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KANJORSKI] to finish his point.

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, our point is that we could all come up with this type of budget. We could have 435 different budgets taking into consideration various conditions. Right now we have what is called the coalition budget that has no tax cut in it and that does balance the budget, so clearly the Democratic side or the President could put that budget on the table or some various of that, which the Senate seems to have put together on their side.

It requires, however, a decision as to whether or not we are going to have a tax cut, a smaller proportional tax cut, or no tax cut at all to arrive at that balance. That is what we call in common political parlance, and legal parlance, compromise.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. KANJORSKI. It is the time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SCARBOROUGH].

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, let me state, the problem is not compromising between Republicans, even freshman Republicans and some conservative to moderate Democrats. We have the numbers to pass a balanced budget right now through this House if the administration would just get on board.

The votes last night, where not one person supported the President's budget. The vote two nights ago, where an overwhelming number of Democrats supported 7-year CBO showed that we could work together. We are willing to put everything on the table, but it has to be in the President's best interest to pass a balanced budget before he gets engaged in this.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I have to reclaim my time. If I have time, I will yield for a question. Let me say to my friend from Pennsylvania, I do not know if it is extreme polarization on the budget. Clearly, among 435 Members, we have all kinds of opinions.

Some Members do not feel that we ought to balance the budget. Some want to balance the budget their way or no way, and we have some of that. We cannot all stand completely on principle, or we would never get anything out of here. We have to compromise, and I recognize that.

The difficulty that we have on our side of the aisle is that the President whether he was campaigning in 1992, said he was not balancing the budget in 5 years. In 1993, he got up here at the State of the Union and said CBO numbers were the most reliable numbers. Now we come up with CBO 7-years and we have yet to see a plan from him that balance in 7 years, and that has caused us some confusion.

Mr. Speaker, when we see that plan, I think it is going to be easier to compare the President's vision with numbers that balance and our plan.

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield, I would say but, you realize that 5 years, 7 years, all depends what you want to do. Look, I can give you a budget today, and you can too, that balances the budget in year.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I recognize that, but I think it is key if we could get in that box of 7 years, with honestly scored numbers, then we are all talking off the same song sheet. Right now we are not there.

Ours has been scored by the Congressional Budget Office. We know what it does. If my Democrat colleagues do not like the values or what it does to people, that is fine. But how would my friend do it within the same box?

Let me make a couple of other points. Federal employees have really, during this whole debate, been an unintended victim of this debate. Over the last several years they have seen the Federal Government downsized and many Federal employees have been losing their jobs and having to go elsewhere.

We have seen their benefits cut. We saw them cut in the last Congress. This time, there were resolutions up here to have them give up another 2½ percent of their pay to put in their retirement. We saw an effort to bring their retirement down so that their standards would not be the high 3 years, but the high 5 years. That would basically reduce their retirement.

We saw some proposals up here that would cap the Federal payment for the Federal Employees Health Benefit Plan, which would mean they would be paying more for their health insurance. We saw another proposal here that would charge Federal employees for parking, even in buildings where nobody else was paying a parking fee. We were able to defeat most of those as we were moving ahead, but the unsettling thing is that working for the Federal Government is not what it used to be.

We used to say, "Give me your best and your brightest." Now it is come work for us; we will cut your benefits, we will downsize you, we will furlough you. Now they are experiencing furloughs and it is the Christmas time. Today is December 20. Many Federal employees would have received their paychecks today, but because of the shutdown in some agencies, that is not going to happen.

Mr. Speaker, the good news today, and I would like to ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD a letter to Senator JOHN WARNER, to myself, to the gentlewoman from Maryland, Mrs. MORELLA, the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. WOLF, my colleague from Virginia, a letter from Speaker NEWT GINGRICH and Senate Majority Leader BOB DOLE, where they say in here that, and I will put the whole letter in the RECORD, but they basically assure Federal employees that when this is over, they will be paid retroactively.

Mr. Speaker, this has always been done before; this will be done this time. Having the House leadership on board, and the Senate leadership on board at this time, is very important.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear the news that the Federal employees are going to be paid, but they are not going to be working.

Mr. Speaker, I submit the following letter for the RECORD.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
December 20, 1995.

Hon. JOHN WARNER,
U.S. Senate.

Hon. FRANK R. WOLF
Hon. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA
Hon. TOM DAVIS
U.S. House of Representatives.

Dear Colleagues:

Because of your interest in the ongoing budget negotiations and your strong support for federal employees, we wanted to take this opportunity to reaffirm our letter of November 10, 1995, in which we made clear that employees furloughed through no fault of their own should not be punished.

It is unfortunate that President Clinton has chosen to veto appropriations bills that would have funded the salaries of federal employees at the Departments of Justice, State, Commerce, Veterans Affairs, and Housing and Urban Development, as well as independent agencies such as the Environmental Protection Agency. Similarly, procedural objections by Democrats have prevented the funding of salaries at the Departments of Labor, HHS and Education.

The direct result of those actions is that furloughed federal employees at those particular agencies cannot be paid. However, we would like to reaffirm our commitment to restoring any lost wages for federal employees in a subsequent funding bill.

Thank you for your continued and strong leadership on behalf of federal workers.

NEWT GINGRICH,
Speaker of the House.
BOB DOLE,
Senate Majority Leader.

CONTINUING RESOLUTION IS CONGRESS' RESPONSIBILITY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I was very surprised and disappointed today to learn that negotiations to get the Government operating again have been broken off. I just want to make sure that my constituents in the State of Washington know that I believe that this impasse is not justified; that it is, I believe, time for the senior Members of the House, both on the Democratic side, and the Republican side, to come together and to insist that we get a continuing resolution enacted which can only be done by this House and by this Congress.

It is not the President of the United States's fault that the Republican Congress has refused to enact a continuing resolution. They have precipitated this crisis. As we remember, Speaker GINGRICH said many months ago that he intended to do this very thing in order to try to get the President to capitulate and to accept his budget priorities which clearly are not acceptable to the American people.

I feel very strongly as someone who has served in this body for 19 years that we have a responsibility as Members of this institution to keep this Government running. We have veterans who may possibly not get their checks in the next few days unless we get a continuing resolution passed. I am going to support that. If the leadership of the House brings it to the floor, we ought to vote on it and get it done. But I do not think it should stop there.

I am concerned about the people who work in the Forest Service, who work in the Park Service, who work in the Department of the Interior and the people who work at Health and Human Services, all these other agencies who are not going to be taken care of. It is very obvious that, when there is a little heat put on, the majority is willing to make some adjustments. So if the American people want this Government to operate, they are going to have to make sure that the new Members who were elected last time hear from their constituents that they want this Government reopened and started.

This is ridiculous, and then there is no justification for it. This is the worst crisis we have had in terms, I think, of the confidence of the people of this country about our Government. What the Republican majority wants is for Bill Clinton to capitulate and accept their very radical prescription for the budget. The American people do not accept the levels of cuts in Medicare and Medicaid. I think it is preposterous to have a $254 billion tax cut when we are trying to balance the budget. That tax cut makes it incumbent upon the majority then to make these very large cuts in Medicare and Medicaid and also in education and other very sensitive and important programs to the American people.

I just hope we can bring some common sense back. I hope that the senior Members in the Democratic Party, the senior Members in the Republican Caucus can bring some sense back to this institution and do our job. We should initiate a continuing resolution to get these people back to work.

I feel sorry for the Government workers and their families who at this Christmas time are being denied their work, their opportunity to earn a living, because of this impasse.

I also urge the President to stand his ground. He should not capitulate. He should not accept this radical agenda. I am very upset about this. I am very upset and feel very badly for the people and their families who are being forced out of work because of this inability to reach an agreement.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. VOLKMER. It becomes very obvious to me at least, maybe not others, that there are those, especially among the freshman group, after listening to one of the freshman speak earlier today, that they almost relish the Government shutting down. The Federal Government is the enemy. They want to take it down to nothing.

I can remember back when I had a conservative tell me that the Federal Government should defend our shores, deliver the mail, and get out of our pocketbooks. In other words, that is all the Federal Government should do. That is what I am hearing here, especially among the radical ones, that they want to shut the Federal Government down. To them there is nothing wrong with it. That is what one of the freshmen said earlier today.

JUST THE TRUTH

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SCARBOROUGH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, people are talking about how disappointed they are and how sad they are. Let me say what saddens me, that people can get on this floor with a straight face, with a straight face, mind you, and still spread the untruth that we are cutting Medicare. I hear that we are slashing Medicare. It is a radical agenda.

I had a member of my district call and say, please, will somebody tell me who is telling the truth up in Washington. The President keeps saying that he is shutting down the Government, and he is not going to pass the first balanced budget in a generation because you are radically cutting Medicare.

I do not want to call the President of the United States a liar, and I will not. I will let the Washington Post, the New Republic, and members of the President's own staff, former staff do this. This is the front cover of the New Republic. It says why the Democrats' demagoguery is even worse than you thought. The New Republic is one of the most liberal publications in America since 1914. It is flat out saying the President is not telling the truth.

The Washington Post writes an editorial. What saddens me, what deeply saddens me is every person that comes up and says that we are slashing Medicare is, A, either knowing that that is not true or, B, is ignorant of the facts. Ignorant of the facts that the Washington Post points out, when they say that the Democrats led by the President have chosen instead to present themselves as Medicare's great protectors, they have shamelessly used the issue, demagogued on it because they think that is where the votes are and the way to derail the Republicans.

The President was still doing it this week. A Republican proposal to increase Medicare premiums was the reason he alleged to veto and shut down the Government. But never mind the fact that the President himself would countenance the same increase. The Washington Post—this is not from NEWT GINGRICH. Wake up, America. Wake up. This is from the Washington Post, the New Republic: We are being called radical.

Do you know what is so radical about our plan, that on Medicare, we are doing the same exact thing that President Clinton and Hillary Clinton said we needed to do 2 years ago. Hillary Clinton, shake your head, Hillary Clinton testified on Capitol Hill that we needed to slow the growth in Medicare to twice the rate of inflation. She suggested 6½ percent. The Republican plan increases it to 7 percent. Furthermore, spending on Medicare explodes to 65 percent over the next 7 years.

The press knows it. The press has stated as much. The markets have stated as much. Everybody knows the truth. Do not believe me, do not believe NEWT GINGRICH, do not believe the Democrats. Listen to what neutral observers are saying. They are trying to scare senior citizens because they are devoid of any plan to balance the budget in 7 years.

The New Republic has said it. The Washington Post has said it. The Washington Times has said it. The Wall Street Journal has said it. Editorial boards around America have said it. They said it this past week when they called Leon Panetta on the carpet on This Week with David Brinkley.

Do my colleagues know what Leon Panetta's final remark was? Well, it is just to give the rich tax cuts. Let me tell my colleagues, check it out. Eighty-nine percent of these tax cuts for the so-called rich, 89 percent as scored by CBO, goes to families earning under $75,000. Check it out. Check out the truth.

Is $75,000 or less for a family the way that Bill Clinton defines rich these days? If so, I think he needs to lead a Third World country instead of America, because there are a lot of people with three or four children making $75,000 or less that have trouble getting by. If that is a tax cut for the rich, label me guilty. I am sick and tired of what is going on. I just want to hear the truth. Give me some truth.

REPUBLICAN PROPOSAL ON MEDICARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. POMEROY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, that was quite a display we just saw, for all the fire and volume, kind of a temper tantrum really at the rostrum. I think it is very unfortunate that we are not proceeding in more of a thoughtful way reflective of the weighty issues that we have responsibility to resolve.

The gentleman hollering, describing how nothing is impacted under the Republican-passed budget regarding Medicare, in point of fact that is simply not the case. The part B premium alone, Mr. Speaker, $46.10 a month today, in the final year of the Republican plan that will be $88.90, compared to $46.10.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POMEROY. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Would the gentleman also admit that under the President's plan there is only a $4 difference between the Republican plan and the President's own plan?

Mr. POMEROY. Reclaiming my time, it is not at all clear to me where the administration is on the part B premium number. But I will tell the gentleman this. The only plan that virtually doubles the part B premium is the GOP-passed budget resolution.

Let me tell my colleagues another thing. I used to regulate insurance. I spent a lot of time dealing with the insurance needs of senior citizens in the State that I represent. There is an issue called balanced billing. In the old days, I mean back just now a decade, even less than that, Medicare would pay a portion of the bill, but the physician could bill the senior citizen that amount. Then any amount more, Medicare would pay the Medicare part, but the senior citizen out of pocket would be eligible for the difference.

Congress in its wisdom a few years ago in a bipartisan vote voted to say, no, no, no, doctors, you cannot charge unlimited amounts over Medicare. You can only bill in fact when fully implemented, I believe the difference is 15 percent over what Medicare approves as an appropriate charge. If you are in an indemnity plan under the Republican budget, you are again exposed to that virtually unlimited amount over what is a Medicare approved charge.

So we can talk differences in part B premium. I believe they are very serious differences, new out-of-pocket costs for seniors. But I think even more serious is this whole business of balanced billing, the physician billing over and above what the Medicare has said is an acceptable charge.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, please just clarify for me. The administration proposal is scored, shows a $4 difference in the year 2002 between the Republican plan. I mentioned that before, and then the gentleman said that he did not know if that was the case, but said the Republican plan was the only plan that doubled premiums. If in fact that is the case and that has been documented in the Post and other publications, then the President's plan too would double it, would it not, if there is only a $4 difference in premiums in 2002?

Mr. POMEROY. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, the only plan that causes part B premiums to double is the GOP budget plan. The things that the gentleman does not consider Medicare cuts in fact to a senior citizen that suddenly has to pay a lot more out of pocket because Medicare does not pay it anyone, I am telling the gentleman, they think their benefits have been cut. They think it in a very real and personal way.

I yielded happily to my friend from South Carolina, and we had an interesting exchange. In fact I wish we had a lot more of that going on right now in constructive circumstances, most particularly at a negotiating table.

I have been in public life a long time. It has been my opportunity, I have not been in Congress long, but I have got the opportunity to work for public issues on behalf of North Dakotans in the State legislature and for the insurance commissioner. In addition to that, I was in the private sector practicing law in my hometown. I have been involved in lots of negotiations, lots and lots of negotiations.

What I learned is, you come to the table with the position. You care deeply about it. The other side comes to the table with a position. They care deeply about that. And then you start to deal. I do not mean callously, just cutting deals willy-nilly. But you begin to negotiate, engaging the other side, talking about the things that really matter to you, trying to find common grounds.

I think it is a tragedy that this afternoon, with the Federal Government, portions of it shut down, with budget talks at an impasse, we do not have this kind of negotiation under way. I urge all of my colleagues to insist we get negotiations underway and let us fund Government while these important talks proceed.

DO NOT PLAY POLITICS WITH MEDICARE OR THE BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WELDON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, prior to coming to the U.S. Congress, I used to practice medicine. I practiced internal medicine and half of my patients were senior citizens. I do hope someday to be able to go back to my practice and resume taking care of senior citizens because I very much enjoy that type of practice. I have always like caring for seniors.

They are all in the Medicare program. The Medicare program has been a tremendous success. I think it has been instrumental in prolonging lives of seniors. And one of the key components of our balanced budget plan that we put on the President's desk is maintaining the solvency of the Medicare plan that makes sure that it will be there for seniors, and all we have done with this plan is we have done exactly what the President and the First Lady said needed to be done in 1993 when they were pushing their health care plan. They said, and if I may paraphrase them if I do not quote them exactly right, is that all you need to do is lower the inflation rate in the Medicare plan from where it is right now, 10 or 11 percent down to about 7 percent, and the plan comes into balance.

Now there has been a lot of stuff said about the Medicare Part B premium. The GOP plan is going to double the Medicare Part B premium over the next 7 years. Well, guess what, my colleagues. Under the Democrats who have controlled this House for 40 years, guess what? Over the last 7 years the Medicare Part B premium doubled, they doubled the premium the last 7 years. Under the President's proposal it is going to much double. But, you know what? Next year, in the election year, under the President's proposal, he wants to reduce the Medicare Part B premium, and then he will increase it steadily every year thereafter once he is firmly ensconced in the White House for another 4 years.

I believe this is wrong, that you should not play politics with a program as important as Medicare which provides health care for our seniors. I also think you should not be playing politics with an issue as important, as crucial, as balancing our budget in 7 years.

Mr. Speaker, I ran on a campaign that says you must balance the budget in 7 years, and there was a very, very high degree of frustration amongst the voters in my district because they heard about Gramm-Rudman, they heard about the budget deal of 1987, they heard about the budget deal of 1990, and the tax increase of 1990 and how that was going to balance our budget, and then they heard again about the 1993 program, how this was finally going to do it.

Here we go again in 1995. We have got $200—$180 billion deficit, and the budget that the President presented to us scored by the CBO, an agency that the President himself said is the group that should be scoring the budgets, says that his budget is going to be in debt, show deficits $200 billion a year out of 5 to 7 years into the plan. He finally produced a slightly better budget that was only going to have a deficit of about $100–120 billion a year.

Now what we are saying, what the Republican freshmen are saying, is enough is enough, no more smoke and mirrors. We want a budget that is going to balance in 7 years.

Now there are a lot of people getting up here and saying, "Oh, we need to do a continuing resolution and get the Government open." I have got a lot of Government workers in my district. I have got Kennedy Space Center. I have got engineers who are furloughed, and guess what, my colleagues on that side of the aisle? They call me up, and they send me letters, and they say, "Don't give in. I know I'm laid off, I know I'm not working, but you have got to balance the budget. We cannot continue to run these deficits." Mr. Speaker, they tell me it is immoral, they want me to hang tough, they do not want me to cave in. They want the budget balanced, and they want the budget balanced in 7 years.

Indeed I got a phone call yesterday from a Democrat who told me that everything we are doing is right. He said, "Don't give in."

Now I am not going to vote for another CR. We signed a CR 3 or 4 weeks ago, and what happened? That gave the President the chance to waffle for 3 or 4 weeks and the AFL–CIO 3 to 4 weeks to run million-dollar-a-day ads trying to get us not to balance the budget.

I will tell you what I think we need to do. Half of your conference over there agrees we need to balance the budget in 7 years, and what I say is the President will not come around, let us forget about the President, let us sit down with the conservative side of the Democratic Caucus with us and come to terms on a 7-year balanced budget so we can do a veto override, and we can reopen the Government, and we can all go home for Christmas.

But I bought a Christmas tree, and I brought my wife and daughter up here, and I am willing to stay as long as it takes.

THIS IS A HOSTAGE SITUATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this is a hostage situation. I know from which I speak. I was a hostage of the Vietnamese Government for six Christmases. I knew what was going on at that time. As a hostage in Vietnam I knew what my options were. I really had a feel of the paralysis of the circumstance, and I could live with that. I was a volunteer, just like so many of our brave men and women that are in Bosnia right now are volunteers to serve their Nation, and I would take my hit. I did not have any problem with that. But what we have here is a nation, an entire nation, every citizen of the United States, being held hostage to the radical extremist portion of the Republican Caucus conference.

Now maybe they can justify that. Maybe that is OK. Maybe they are OK out there writing the new Dickens Christmas Schrooge Carol based on new circumstances, modern circumstances. Maybe in fact they all wish to be the Christmas Scrooge because they are holding not only the Federal employees who have been furloughed, they are holding this entire country hostage to an ideology that the country is not buying into.

The United States citizenry is not extreme, they are not radicals. They are God-fearing, compassionate, logically thinking people, and they cannot understand why it is that we as a House of Representatives cannot sit down and agree to disagree; first of all, to get down to some negotiations, but then to get to the point of compromise, yes, compromise, the word "compromise" which has been for whatever reason essentially destroyed in its definition. In fact we are using the term "compromise" in its worst categorization, which would be to suggest to compromise one's values.

We are ultimately going to have to compromise, my colleagues. We are ultimately going to have to do the people's business. We are ultimately going to have to answer to the mainstream of America as we deal with this budget issue.

Extremist, radical ideas are not America's ideas. There will be a price to pay if the radical elements continue, and that price will be paid at the ballot box next November because that is how it works here.

The question is who, in fact, is in charge? Who is in charge? Who is leading here in this national government? We have lost our leadership. Clearly the Republican side has lost its leadership because they have failed to keep the motors of government working, which is their contract with America as a majority. It is their contract to keep the offices of the government running. They have purposefully shut them down, and they have done so, in fact I believe, with malice. We need to move on.

THE BLAME GAME

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, today I listened to the President in his news conference, and he was talking about essentially in the same way and with the same terms as the previous speaker about extreme freshmen, 73 individuals that are holding up the Government, and you know it is the same old story: the blame game.

By the way, I remember a President by the name of John F. Kennedy, and I remember when the Bay of Pigs tragedy happened, and President Kennedy stood up and said, "I take the blame, the buck stops here." But what I heard from President Clinton today was that it is the freshmen that are causing this problem, those extremists.

It reminded me not too long ago when we had the tragedy in Waco. The President said, "It is not my fault," and the Attorney General had to take the blame.

He is never to blame. It is never his fault.

He has offered four budgets that do not keep his word with CBO scoring, but it is not his fault. There were three bills on his desk that he could have signed that would have got the Government up and running again, Commerce, Interior, and VA–HUD, that would have put the people back to work, but he vetoed them, and he blames the freshmen.

Mr. Speaker, let us talk about those extreme freshmen just for a minute. What is extreme, and I asked this the other day, what is extreme about wanting a balanced budget in 7 years? Seven years, not tomorrow, not next year, not 2 years from now, but 7 years. A glidepath for 7 years that is going to actually spend basically $3 billion more than what we are spending now. There are no cuts. We are going to be spending more money. As I said, a glidepath toward a balanced budget that will provide a future for our children and our grandchildren, that will not allow this country to go bankrupt. What is extreme about that? Trying to save the economic viability of this country.

Medicare. The President said we are extremists, that we are going to cut, slash, kill Medicare. There is only a 2-percent difference between the Republican plan and the President's plan. Basically $138 difference over a year period of time in the year 2002 on what would be spent per individual.

What are we talking about here when we are talking about extremists and radicals? Individuals that want to save Medicare for their mothers and fathers. My mother and father are 78 years old. I want to save Medicare.

Why would I do anything to hurt the most precious people that I know? I do not know when this rhetoric is going to stop, but it is time that we get serious about balancing the budget. It is time we do have serious negotiations, but the President is not willing. He is the one that is not willing. He is the one that broke it off last night. He is the one that said, in one instance through the Vice President, that, "Well, we cannot go specifically by the CBO. We have to have other numbers in there." Then he comes back later and he said, "That was not what we meant. We are willing to go by CBO scores now."

What are we dealing with here? Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, I wish the President would just come forth, put a budget on the table that would provide for a balanced budget in 7 years and that would allow the CBO to score it to see if the numbers are right. I think we would be willing to then look at, what is he talking about, Medicare and taxes? We are willing to look.

WE CANNOT FORGET THE POOR IN OUR NATION IN ORDER TO MAKE THE WEALTHY WEALTHIER

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Texas [Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest. I, too, am tired with the rhetoric. No matter which way you put it, there are real people out there being affected. I am from a regional city with many, many, many Federal employees. I, too, have gotten messages: Stick with the President.

I am from a city and a district that has one of the most well-known medical schools, one of the most well-known dental schools. A medical school that has four Nobel Prize winners there now in my district. None of them are for these cuts. All of them understand that when we put the bottom line to it, there are a few more dollars being added. So no, there is not a cut as such; but what we have forgotten to be honest with the people about, there are a million more people going into the system to share these dollars. When you put that many more people into a system, those dollars will not spread broadly enough.

When these dollars do not spread, the individuals see it as a cut because the services are simply not there. We can call it whatever we want to call it, but when the services are not there, the choices are not there, and people are having to pay more out of their pockets. When offsprings of these senior citizens are having to pick up the tab, when spouses are having to give up their job security and their homes to pay bills, they see it as a cut. We can count the dollars, whatever we want to do, it is a cut for the people. They feel it. They know it when they feel it.

Mr. Speaker, we are doing this just the opposite than what America has promised. We are punishing the poor and the most vulnerable to help the rich. That is not the way it has been intended. You can say that we are giving a tax break to persons making $75,000 a year, but when you are taking away from those who are making $25,000 or less, that is punishment of the most vulnerable population. When we take away Head Start, when we take away education funds, we are doing just the opposite of what our society needs to cope with tomorrow. Any way you look at it, that is hurting all of us, because we hurt our future.

Every nation that is doing better economically has a history of investing in their human resources. That is their people. We are refusing to do that. We are in the shape of a Third World nation, but it is OK if you are rich. It is the poor, the disabled, the elderly, that are being affected, and our children, which is this Nation's future.

Anyone who thinks the rich children are safe while we let poor children wander around in the wilderness of poverty, hunger, and the lack of education is in a different world than reality. Every child's future is at stake, not just the wealthy. We can get up here and talk all we want to talk about saving the future for our children, taking away the price tag. Let me assure you, when we remove food, when we remove shelter, when we subject the poorest children to water that is not safe, food that is not safe, and continue to dump in the neighborhoods where air is not safe, do not think we are not going to pick up the tab. We are going to pick it up through hospital bills, we will pick it up through prisons, but we have the responsibility and we will pick it up somehow.

We simply cannot forget the poor in our Nation just to keep making the wealthy wealthier. It does not work. It does not work, no matter what gender, no matter what color, no matter what the origin of birth. It does not work for any of us.

It is time for all of us to come to the table, forget the rhetoric, forget we are going to do just a revolution for the sake of revolution. We have to think about human beings. These are human beings we are affecting. These are living, breathing people. I say to you, it is time, it is time for us for give attention to the most vulnerable.

PASSING A CONTINUING RESOLUTION WOULD LET PEOPLE HAVE A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to maybe digress here. I wish some of the speakers who have spoken earlier were here. I have been around here for quite some time, and some people have a tendency to kind of rewrite history here.

The people that continually come to this well, and the good gentleman from Florida who practiced medicine in Florida, he said he was so concerned about his parents, and I feel sure he is, and is glad he still has his parents with him. Some of us do not have that privilege. But their rhetoric does not match up with the record of the Republican Party.

I remember back early on when Ronald Reagan first came to office, the first budget David Stockman sent to this House called for the $125 cut for the oldest, neediest senior citizens in this country, to cut out the $125 for these senior citizens. I can also remember, and I look at the RECORD back when Medicare was established, and it got no support. In fact, the majority leader in the Senate said he fought, he fought very, very hard to try to see that Medicare would never become a reality. Social Security was not supported by the Republican Party. Certainly Medicaid was not supported by the Republican Party.

The folks say to me, they say, "We are going to give senior citizens a bigger choice. We are going to let you do, and you are going to get an insurance policy. We are going to give you some choice." One of the things that they crucified Hillary Clinton and President Clinton for was to try to get people to move into HMO's and these areas. I can just imagine if I go to Prudential or some carrier that carrier health insurance and I say, "I want to get some insurance," and they say, "How old are you?" I say, "I am 66 years old. I have had open heart surgery. I have heart disease. It will get progressively worse." "Well, I'm sorry about that, but we cannot handle you," and the anxiety that it gives to our senior citizens.

One of the gentlemen mentioned it is only like $100 or $150 a year. That does not sound like much to a Member of Congress here, but I have people who come into my district offices in North Carolina every day, senior citizens living on fixed incomes that have to make a determination whether they are going to pay their monthly bills or whether they are going to get a prescription filled. It is not just the Medicare and the Medicaid that is so wrong with the budget that the Republicans have passed. It goes to other areas. Unless they have taken it out recently, you have the spousal impoverishment that is in the bill. If one of the couple has to go into the nursing home, the existing spouse no longer can protect their property. Their children can be liable for that homestead or what have you. It is just a cruel hoax, this entire bill. It is not just the Medicare and Medicaid portion of it. It is all across. There is a mean spirit through this entire budget.

The gentleman spoke down here and said the President sent up a bill which we voted on the other day which was a total hoax. There was not one day's hearing. They took some quotes out of some statements that had been made months and months ago and put together a bill with not one day's hearings. It did not even go to the Rules Committee, and they brought it here on this floor and try to pan it off. It was a charade, it was a phony bill, it was a phony vote to embarrass the President of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to get to another point. My grandkids, if you will permit me to be personal, my grandkids are coming here this weekend. They are going to spend Christmas with me. I do not have to leave this town. The gentleman made the remark his kids are coming. He is probably going to fly his wife and kids up from Florida to be here for Christmas. We can stay here for Christman. But there are thousands and thousands of American citizens out there that do not take part in this debate, they had no part in this, and they are going to be absolutely frustrated during the holidays. They are going to be concerned about it.

Let me just remind my colleagues on the other side, they talk about a revolution that took place in November. Let me just remind my colleagues that 60 percent of the American people said, "A pox on both of your parties. We did not vote for any of you." Your Contract With America said when you were going to balance the budget, you did not go far enough and say we are going to balance the budget, but we are going to cut Medicare, Medicaid, we are going to do away with clean water, all these things. Had you added that into the contract, the numbers would have gone down drastically.

Why do we not do a continuing resolution, let people have a merry Christmas and a happy new year, and same to you, Tiny Tim.

AMERICANS WANT AN HONEST BALANCED BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a couple of things during this span, as we wait for the rule to come down from the Committee on Rules. On this side we want a balanced budget. I believe a lot of Members on that side want a balanced budget, too. They want it honestly scored, and that means by the Congressional Budget Office. We are tired of smoke and mirrors and phony numbers and the CR that we had last time. A lot of us were optimistic that something was going to happen, and it did not. That is why we are in the situation that we are in today.

Mr. Speaker, I reminded a colleague of mine earlier this afternoon that I was one of those who voted against the Bush budget back in 1990. I remember being down in the White House and meeting with a number of his advisers, and I said then that his assumptions and statistics that he was showing us in 1990 were wrong, because he told us that if that budget passed in 1990, and it did, despite my opposition, that we would have a surplus in 1995 of $65 billion. The OMB was off $225 billion.

We are tired of that. We are tired of trying to hoodwink the American public in terms of making tough decisions, and when the pie is finally taken out of the oven, it is not done. We want it done. The end product every one of us on this side wants and a good number on your side, and I hope including yourself: that pie done in a balanced fashion by the year 2002.

One of the things we are trying to do now is to get the sides together, put them in a room, lock the door, call out for Domino's Pizza on whatever you are going to do, and not let them out until we get a deal.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPTON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, just to make two points on the scoring, I do not think the American people are sitting out there having dinner and saying they are talking about a score by OMB rather than CBO. But CBO was off $135 billion. I will agree with you, get some people together that want to balance this budget. I am for balancing this budget. But we are being told they are not going to pass a budget in this House unless it is Democrats that go your way. You say, "You do it our way, or it will be no way," and that is no way to negotiate.

Mr. LAHOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LAHOOD. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman about the point, I think there are probably a lot of people out there eating dinner and probably some of them watching C-Span, and I doubt if very few of them understand all the scoring. But I will tell you one thing the American people understand. I think it is reflected in votes that have been made on this floor throughout the year. The fact that we passed a balanced budget amendment with 300 votes, it included a lot of Democrats, and maybe some of the people who are sitting here this evening. We passed a balanced budget resolution with the vast majority of Democrats voting with us.

The reason is that our people who are elected to these jobs, whether they be Republicans or Democrats, know that the American people want a balanced budget. The reason is because of the fact they balance their budget year in and year out, they know how to do it, they look at their ledgers, they see how much money is coming in, and they say, "Why can't you do this in Washington? What is the problem? Why do we have a $5 trillion debt?" Because we have overspent.

So the average person watching television out there, eating dinner, for those people that are, they understand how this works.

Mr. HEFNER. If the gentleman will yield further, Mr. Speaker, I am not disagreeing with him. But it boils down to this: we can have negotiations, but it cannot be "My way or no way."

□ 1815

That is no way to negotiate.

Mr. UPTON. Reclaiming my time, I think that we can reach a bipartisan accord. The vote that we had here 2 nights ago, it passed big time: 7 years, CBO numbers, most of us, again. I think only 40 Members voted against it. I think that there is room for a bipartisan agreement, and there are a number of us that want to do that.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to sound sarcastic, but if we could put together a budget, get to a budget in 7 years scored by CBO, is the gentleman at liberty to deliver some Republican votes if it met with your approval?

Mr. UPTON. I believe so, and I think that is what we all ought to be working here tonight to try and do, and tomorrow night and the next night, until it is done.

Mr. HEFNER. Because we understand and have been told that the only budget we are going to get will be a Republican budget with enough votes over here to override a veto. If we cannot get some support to where we can come as a bipartisan group, we have very serious reservations about it. But I am asking if you and I could sit down as honest brokers.

LET THE LEADERS LEAD

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to come down here on the floor and say that all week I have stayed away from the floor. I felt that there was really nothing that could be said at this point in time, that the American people mostly, those that are fortunate enough to be with their families and about to enjoy a holiday with shopping and getting ready for Christmas and trying to have a family occasion where there could be happiness and good cheer, that they probably thought that we in Washington, Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate, that we could not get our job done.

They pay us well, they send us to Washington to represent them, and they would like us to carry out our duties. Yet we hear this more or less "blame game." I do not think that is going on in the country. I think they are saying, all of us are not doing our job.

I reached a point of frustration this afternoon, listening to the conversation on the floor, because things get mixed, what is happening here. We have appropriation bills that are passed on this floor and on the floor of the Senate that go to the President and are signed, and those bills fund, through taxpayers' money, the various agencies of the U.S. Government. Six of these bills have not been finished.

That has happened in other years, and then we have what is called a continuing resolution. It comes to both floors and is passed, and then the problems within the different bills are hammered out and worked out, and then eventually we have an appropriations bill. Of course, that is not what happened 2 weeks ago and that is not what is happening now.

The continuing resolution does not pass and, therefore, those agencies stop, and the result is that 200,000 people cannot go to work.

I do not understand it. This is not the budget. The budget is another whole process. The budget, there are a lot of differences, differences about values, differences about priorities, differences about the budget of the United States of America and about the size of the Federal Government. That is all in the budget.

But the continuing resolution is different, and I do not see why we hold the continuing resolution hostage to the budget.

We as Members of Congress are fortunate. We have an office down here and at home. In that office, I think each and every one of us works very hard on casework, and yet we are saying to 200,000 Federal workers, we are not letting you go to work. I just think that goes against everything I have ever worked for.

We are saying to people who want to go to work at the Smithsonian and other museums and our art galleries, at our monuments that we are so proud of, at our parks that are so beautiful, no, you cannot go. Yet, as Members of Congress, we work very hard so that people who want to come to Washington can get their tickets, can go to the Washington Monument and the Mint, yet we have closed all of these. It is beyond me.

So I would just like to say tonight, can we not pass a continuing resolution, open up the Government to the people who pay for it, the citizens of the United States of America, and not hold it hostage to the budget of the Federal Government which has different philosophical thinking and priorities. I just do not understand why we do not respect our Federal worker more.

Some of us have traveled in other countries; we have read about other countries, we have dealt with other countries, and we know that their federal governments, their government workers are not respected to the extent they should be because they have not been treated correctly. They work at a lower rate of pay, they do not get the respect that they deserve over the years, and as a result, they do not function like our Federal Government has always functioned and its workers.

Our workers are proud of what they do, they go to work in the morning, they do a full day's work, they go home at night, they are with their families and they are very, very good citizens. They should not be put in the vise of this budget resolution.

Tomorrow we should have a continuing resolution on this floor and on the Senate floor, and our Government should go on.

Then I hear people saying, well, what is happening about the budget; and it is said, you know, that there is a group that does not want the budget, the new freshman class, they are saying, no, you cannot have this particular budget unless it has what we want in it. You cannot do it that way.

First I heard a young man down here talking tonight and he was talking about the President of the United States, the President, another President, a former President saying, "The buck stops here." We did have a former President that said that. But they are not letting the buck stop here with this President.

Yesterday we had the President of the Senate, Mr. DOLE, and the speaker of the House, Mr. GINGRICH, go to the White House. All of the television cameras were on, and the two gentleman walked in and sat down with the President and they began some discussion; they came out, and it looked like we were going to have some progress, and we all felt so good.

Yet today we hear that, no, the 73 freshmen are not exactly satisfied with what happened there.

Well, you cannot have it both ways. You cannot have it: "The buck stops here," and the: "We want to all be involved." The negotiations, any negotiations, breaking it down to a smaller group with only the leaders. In Dayton, they sent the Presidents of those countries and they sat down at the table and they figured out what was going on. They could not bring all of the countries with them.

So what I am saying is why do we not all step out of the way and decide what is happening and come back and vote on it. Let us let the leaders lead.

PRESIDENT SHOULD GET SERIOUS ABOUT BALANCED BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHRYSLER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CHRYSLER. Mr. Speaker, 31 days ago, President Clinton committed to balancing the budget in a signed contract with Congress that stated: "The President and the Congress shall enact legislation in the first session of the 104th Congress to achieve a balanced budget not later than fiscal year 2002 as estimated by the Congressional Budget Office * * *." Since that time, however, it has become more apparent that this President has no intention of living up to the agreement.

Last October, the 104th Congress passed a balanced budget, one that finally reforms the Nation's welfare system, provides pro-family and pro-jobs tax relief, and saves Medicare from bankruptcy. For 26 years our Federal Government has continued deficit spending, crippling the Nation with a national debt of nearly $5 trillion and jeopardizing the future prosperity of our Nation. This is our last, best hope to do the right thing for the future of our children and grandchildren.

The President claimed he could not agree to our budget and used his Constitutional authority to veto it. This is his right, but in exercising his power to veto he has a moral obligation to present the American people with an honest alternative.

After 4 weeks we are still waiting for him to present us with a budget that balances in accordance with the terms agreed to last month.

Instead of a comprehensive budget proposal, we have received press releases and rhetoric. Instead of negotiating in good faith to seek an agreeable compromise, the President and his allies produced and aired commercials bashing our proposal even before sitting down at the negotiating table. The President talks about compromise but in reality has only engaged in confrontation and demagoguery.

Last Friday, President Clinton submitted yet another budget that comes no where close to balance in 7 years according to the honest, nonpartisan

CBO. In 2002, when our budget would produce a surplus, his plan remains at least $75 billion short. This is the same "we'll get to it someday" mentality that has overshadowed this issue for decades and left us in the current deficit mess we have today.

When put to a vote before this House, the President's budget did not get one single vote—not one Republican vote, not one Democratic vote.

The day before the vote on the President's budget, the House voted overwhelmingly, by a vote of 351 to 40, to reaffirm our commitment to a 7-year balanced budget as determined by the Congressional Budget Office signed by December 31, 1995.

Taken together, that should be a clear signal to the President to get serious about a balanced budget.

Today, however, we get another sign that the President still has not gotten serious. Today the President once again broke his word and broke off negotiations, continuing the partial shutdown of the Federal Government.

I, for one, will not support another continuing resolution until the President lives up to the agreement he made law.

In 1992, President Clinton campaigned on a balanced budget, ending welfare as we know it, and providing tax relief for America's middle class working families—our proposal simply follows through on what this President could not. We have kept our word to the American people and attempted to negotiate in good faith for an agreement both sides could live with. Has the President? Strip away the rhetoric and there is little evidence he truly wants a balanced budget.

NO LINKAGE BETWEEN CR AND BALANCED BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ENGEL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, let us make no mistake about this. It is the Republicans who are shutting down the Government. Clearly and simply, the Republicans, by refusing to vote for a continuing resolution to keep the Government open, are shutting down the Government. They have the majority of votes here and in the Senate, they could easily keep the Government open by voting for a clean continuing resolution with no strings attached, no blackmail attached, and the Government would open and 250,000 Federal workers would go back to work, and then we could negotiate a budget.

But no, they will not do that, because they are trying to link the two issues together; they are saying they will vote for no continuing resolution until there is a 7-year balanced budget.

Now, I want everybody to understand that there is no linkage to keeping the Government open with a continuing resolution and a balanced budget. The Republicans are the ones who are linking it. The reason we are in trouble in the first place is because they did not do their job.

October 1, 1995 was the start of the new fiscal year, and there are 13 appropriations bills which the Republicans were supposed to have sent to the President of the United States, and by that time they had sent only 3. So it is their fault that the Government could not continue and that the Government had to shut down; and the only way you can keep the Government open under those circumstances, when the majority party does not do its job by sending the appropriations bills to the President, is by passing a continuing resolution. They are refusing to do that.

All of this talk and rhetoric about balancing the budget in 7 years is a separate issue from the continuing resolution and from the Government shutdown. The President of the United States has said, and rightfully so, that he will not be blackmailed into accepting the Republican mean-spirited and extreme agenda.

Yes, the majority of Americans want to see a balanced budget, but when you ask the majority of Americans, do you want to see a balanced budget at the expense of Medicare and Medicaid, if it means devastating Medicare and Medicaid, the American people overwhelmingly say no. Well, on the Democratic side of the aisle we say that Medicare and Medicaid and education and the environment and helping working people and not giving a tax break for the rich are Democratic priorities.

While the President did agree 31 days ago to have a 7-year balanced budget, CBO-scored, the Republicans also agreed to protect the Democratic priorities of Medicare, Medicaid, education, the environment, and student loans.

It seems to me that the President, by accepting the concept of a 7-year balanced budget, CBO-scored, has done more to compromise with what the Republicans want to see than the Republicans are doing to compromise with the Democrats. Instead, we get this mean-spirited, extreme attitude, "We're going to shut the Government down if we don't get our way."

NEWT GINGRICH came to the Republican Conference this morning attempting to compromise, apparently, and he was told, "No, we are not going to have a continuing resolution, we're going to shut the Government down." This from the party that talks about family values. A quarter of a million American workers before Christmas are thrown out of work, and they talk about family values.

Congress is going to be in session next week, so we cannot be with our families. They talk about family values. Now, I do not mind Congress being in session if we are actually doing something, but we have been sitting around here all day long today and yesterday while the Republicans are caucusing and not getting anything done, not doing the people's work, arguing, quibbling, passing ridiculous, irrelevant resolutions instead of passing the continuing resolution to get Government open again.

That is the truth. So do not talk to me about family values, do not talk to me about balanced budgets, when you are the ones that are not allowing compromises to be made.

We talk about health care, whether it is a cut in Medicare or just a lessening of an increase, the bottom line is senior citizens in my district and in everybody's districts are on Medicare and Medicaid. The health care coverage is inadequate now. They do not have enough money now to buy medicine.

But let us look at the health care that seniors are getting now in 1995, and what kind of health care will they be getting in 2002 under the Republican plan? The answer is seniors will be paying more and getting less. They will not have the choice. They will be thrown into HMO's. They will not have a choice.

So let us stop the nonsense, let us pass the continuing resolution, let us open up Government again, and then let us negotiate on a balanced budget. One issue has nothing to do with the other.

BOTTOM LINE IN BUDGET BATTLE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHAYS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to my colleague and say to him that this is about everything that is important. I have waited 8 years to see my Government finally balance its budget and get its financial house in order, and that is what we are attempting to do.

We are attempting to do three basic things. Get our financial house in order, balance our Federal budget, is one. The second issue is to save our trust funds, particularly Medicare, from bankruptcy. It starts to become insolvent next year and becomes literally bankrupt in 7 years. The third thing we intend to do and are working very hard to, is to change both the social and corporate welfare state into a caring opportunity society.

That is our objective. I know my colleague feels very heated about this issue, but it is really a distortion to talk about cuts to education when education loans are going to go from $24 to $36 billion. That is a 50-percent increase in education loans.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAYS. If I could just make some points first. Then if I have some time, I would be glad to.

Again, let me say that we intend to have this go from $24 to $36 billion. Only in Washington when you spend 50 percent more on student loans do people call it a cut.

Our Medicaid number is going to go from $89 to $127 billion. Again, only in Washington when you spend so much more do people call it a cut.

We are increasing the school lunch program. We are increasing the student loan program. We are increasing Medicare, we are increasing Medicaid.

We are absolutely determined, and this is not something which one part of our party feels strongly about, we, this Republican Conference, have been working all year long to balance our Federal budget. That is what we are going to do. We are going to get our financial house in order.

It is just amazing to me that we have had such a struggle throughout the year.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAYS. No. I will not yield yet. I will be happy to yield later if I have time. I only have 5 minutes.

I do want to make the point and I think it is very important to be made. We are not saying that it has to be the Republican balanced budget. We do not even come close to saying that.

Yes, we would like to see tax cuts, if it is going to be extended over 7 years. I would be happy to give up any tax cut if we balance the budget in 5 years, but if it is going to take 7 years, I cannot understand why we cannot balance the budget in 7 years with a tax cut. Balance it in 4 or 5 years without a tax cut, it makes sense.

It does not have to be our spending priorities on discretionary spending. Obviously the President and this Congress, Democrats and Republicans, have to weigh in. It is just wrong, in my judgment, for anyone on that side of the aisle to suggest that it has to be our budget. No, it does not. It just has to be balanced in 7 years using the nonpartisan numbers of the CBO.

I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to my good friend from Connecticut, when he spoke about taking care of Medicare and not letting Medicare go bankrupt, the actuaries said that it would take $89 billion to ensure that Medicare would not go bankrupt. Why then under the Republican plan are there $270 billion worth of cuts?

Mr. SHAYS. Reclaiming my time, the gentleman needs to recognize that we need to make it solvent for many more years, and we want to bring it up to the year 2010, 2011, which is the start of the baby boomers. Your plan brings it to solvency for a few more years but does not get it up to the year 2010, which is our objective. We want to balance our Federal budget, we want to save Medicare, and we want it to be solvent to the year 2010.

I would be happy to yield to my colleague.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have a question on the shutdown. You and I had a lengthy discussion yesterday. I raised the issue to you that this shutdown is costing the American people over $800 million. You indicated to me that you all felt that this was the only way you could get the attention of the President of the United States. So the purpose of this shutdown has nothing to do with the balanced budget but with trying to get the President's attention.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, and I plead this not be used against my time. It is very simple to respond. I wish that 10 years ago this Congress had shut down the Government and balanced our Federal budget, and we would not be in the mess we are in today. Our big regret on this side of the aisle is that we gave the President 30 days to come forward with a balanced budget and he chose not to. That is the bottom line to this issue.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAYS. I am happy just to continue with the time that I have left.

The bottom line to this issue, Mr. Speaker, is that we need to get our budget balanced. We would like to do it in less than 7 years. We are determined to save Medicare in particular.

Mr. Speaker, we are determined to balance our budget, get our financial house in order, and save our trust funds.

THE DEMOCRATIC RESPONSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WYNN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Speaker, over the last few days we have been having a momentous debate on this floor and in this country. We have been debating the balanced budget, not whether to have a balanced budget but how to have it. What are the proper priorities?

A lot of people come to me and say, "Why are you guys going back and forth on this?" I tell them, no, it is a good debate, we ought to have this debate. But the question tonight becomes, why do we have to shut down the Government in order to have this debate?

As a point of fact, I believe in a balanced budget, a 7-year balanced budget with CBO estimates. That is not the problem. The question before us tonight is why are we shutting down the Government, why are we putting millions of Federal employees out of work, why are we then paying them not to work on the eve of Christmas?

That is the issue before us tonight.

Well, I will tell you why. The reason why we are shutting down Government is because the Republicans cannot get their budget. Not because they cannot have this debate but because they cannot have their way.

You see we were making progress. The President and the Republican leadership and the Democratic leadership were making good progress and they said, since we are making this progress, why do we not pass a continuing resolution to keep the Government up and running?

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] took this issue back to his Republican colleagues and the radical freshman Republicans said, "No, it's our way or no way." So instead of having a reasonable compromise, a continuing resolution while this debate continues, we have shut down the Government.

I was particularly irritated when I heard one of our smug freshman colleagues comment that, "Well, I've got my Christmas tree and I'm bringing my family up, so I really don't care."

Well, I think that speaks for itself, but it is certainly a sad statement.

Mr. LEWIS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a second?

Mr. WYNN. I would be happy to yield in just a minute.

Let us talk about the merits of this issue. Let us talk about their notion of a balanced budget. First of all they cut $270 billion out of Medicare. Now, a gentleman got up a little earlier on the Republican side and said, "Oh, no, this isn't a cut. We're just slowing the increase."

Let me tell you, ladies and gentlemen, try this on the Defense Department. Take $270 billion out of a Defense Department budget that is below projected needs and then tell them that is not a cut. I do not think it would fly.

We all know this is a cut. It is a significant cut. It means that by the year 2002 seniors will be paying on average $138 more per year just in additional premiums, not to mention the loss of choice of their doctors.

They say, "Well, that's not all that significant." Keep in mind these same seniors only average about $25,000 or less in annual income. So the Medicare question is significant. We do not need the big cut in Medicare. As was indicated, the actuaries say we only need to cut about $89 or $90 billion and we could solve the solvency problem.

Then we go to Medicaid, and in their budget they want to cut 8 million people off the rolls by the year 2002. They want to eliminate the guarantees that we have for the sick, the elderly, the poor, the blind, and the disabled. They want to take 3.8 million children off the Medicaid rolls and deny them the safety net guarantee that we have now.

We have a problem with that. We do not think it is necessary. The reason it is not necessary is because they have hidden in their budget a little poison pill in the form of a $245 billion tax break for the wealthy.

You cannot see this chart out there in America but I will tell you what it says. It says that about half of the tax breaks, half of the $245 billion, go to people making over $100,000 a year. I do not see any reason why we in this Congress ought to be giving a tax break to people making over $100,000 a year. But apparently they do. That is why we are having this problem.

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYNN. I would be happy to yield to my colleague from North Carolina.

Mr. HEFNER. I want to ask you a question, because I heard you say that you believe in doing the CBO scoring. Is that right?

Mr. WYNN. Absolutely.

Mr. HEFNER. Let me ask you this and see if it makes sense. You are going to have a $245 billion tax cut, basically going to the wealthiest people in the country. Unless they get the $270 billion reduction in Medicare, and it gets scored that way, you cannot have the $245 billion tax cut. Does that make sense?

Mr. WYNN. That makes sense to me.

Mr. HEFNER. Is that not the way the scoring works?

Mr. WYNN. That is the way the scoring works.

Mr. HEFNER. Unless you get the cuts in Medicare, you cannot have the $245 billion tax cut?

Mr. WYNN. That is right.

Mr. HEFNER. And that ain't fair in any State in this country.

Mr. WYNN. Absolutely. That is why they want to do it, so they can deliver this big tax break to people making over $100,000 a year.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYNN. In just a minute.

That does not make any sense. They come down and they say, give us honest figures, give us 7 years.

Gentlemen, I will make you a deal. We will give you honest figures and 7 years. You get rid of the tax break for the wealthy, and I think we can work this out.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYNN. In just a minute.

The gentleman said, why do we not put all these people in a room, order pizzas and all that. Maybe we could do that, but you do not need to shut down the Government. You have got Scrooge and the Grinch that stole Christmas. Add to that list the Republican freshmen.

REPUBLICAN REBUTTAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HUTCHINSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, I am going to yield my time in just a moment, but I do want to respond to the previous speaker.

We repeatedly hear this demagoguery that there are tax cuts for the wealthy, and repeatedly during his comments when I asked an opportunity to enter into a colloquy, we heard that these tax benefits are for people making over $100,000 per year.

Well, I have had a lot to do with that $500 per child tax credit. It is something that I have worked on from day one when I entered this Congress, something I totally believe in, because the American family is overtaxed, squeezed to the limit.

For the family making $30,000 a year, I say to the gentleman, to the family making $30,000 a year with two children, they will see their Federal tax liability cut in half. That is not a tax break for the wealthy.

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman yield on that specific point?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. No, sir, I believe I have the time and since you would not yield to me, I would like to complete my statement.

The family making $30,000 a year with two children will see their Federal tax liability cut in half. That is a tax break to the wealthy? That family with $30,000 income and two children? I suggest to you no. They are not wealthy at all.

Mr. Speaker, they are the very people who most need tax relief. For that couple with two children making $25,000 a year, they will see their entire Federal tax liability eliminated. I suggest to you that there are millions and millions of families out there right now who are desiring this tax relief to become a reality. In fact, I was on a radio talk show this morning, one call after another saying, please, do not let the liberals back you down on family tax relief. They need it. We need it. America needs it.

I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SCARBOROUGH].

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, what is so distressing to me is the fact that the numbers are just being misstated politically. I saw Leon Panetta this weekend say that the majority of the tax cuts that go to the families were for wealthy Americans.

The fact of the matter is, CBO has scored it that 89 percent, 89 percent of these tax cuts go to families making $75,000 or less. What frightens me about this is that this is the liberal view, I guess, and the President's view of what now constitutes a rich person in America, a family with three or four people now making $75,000 or less is, according to Leon Panetta on This Week with David Brinkley, is now a rich person in America. That is a truly sad view of America.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, I would like to point out that the $500 tax credit applies to a single person whose income is less than $75,000. Only then would her child be given a $500 tax credit and a married couple of 110. It is income sensitive to those families at that number and below.

I want to reiterate the fact that we have tax cuts in our 7-year plan. We actually eliminate some programs. We slow the growth of other programs. We take entitlements and we definitely slow the growth of entitlements. But with Medicare, Medicare was to grow at 10 or 11 percent. We did what Hillary Rodham Clinton suggested, that we get the growth of Medicare down to 6 to 7 percent. In fact it is actually 7.2 percent. It is .2 percent higher than the First Lady suggested it should be.

So what we are trying to do is slow the growth of certain programs. But if our colleagues on the other side of the aisle and the President do not agree to that, it is a concept of opportunity cost. If you do not slow the growth of one program, where are you going to slow the growth of another program ultimately to balance the budget in 7 years?

So I would just say it is just a misrepresentation of the fact if someone suggests that we are saying they have to agree to our budget. The President does not have to agree to our budget. He has to, for the first time, submit a balanced budget. If I had my wallet in my hand, I would take it out and I would offer it to my colleagues on the other side if they could show me a budget from the President of the United States that is balanced in 7 years using the Congressional Budget Office numbers. It simply has not been done.

In fact, when the President submitted his last budget we put it up for a vote and only a very few Members on either side of the aisle supported it. What we are asking is a balanced budget in 7 years, scored by the Congressional Budget Office. It does not have to be our budget. It can be their tax cuts, with or without.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. If the gentleman will continue to yield, this is an important point. Even though we believe that that is important to us, we will put that on the table. We will put everything on the table. All we want is a balanced budget for future generations. If we have to take up certain tax cuts next year, fine. I just want to see the President of the United States say that my children and future generations are important enough that the Federal Government finally spends only as much money as they take in. Everything is on the table but negotiating our children's future. We must balance the budget.

MEDICARE AND MEDICAID

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. MALONEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WYNN].

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Speaker, let us get straight on these tax figures. The gentleman talks about the people who make $30,000. They only get 13 percent of the total tax break. We could balance this budget and have a deal. Cut out the tax breaks for the wealthy. Just give it to the folks that make $30,000. They are only getting 13 percent. The rich, over $100,000, are getting almost half, almost 50 percent of the tax breaks.

In addition, they repeal the family tax credit so they are actually increasing the taxes on the middle class and working poor. They also give another windfall to the rich because they eliminate the alternative minimum tax. What does that mean? That means $17 billion to the richest corporations in America. That is the truth about the so-called tax breaks.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER].

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Connecticut, he talks about demagoguery, there was a little bit of demagoguery that took place on this floor yesterday when they offered up the sham on the President's budget that had not been scored. It had not been brought here by the President. The President did not request it. It did not go to the Committee on Rules. It had not one day of hearing, not reported out of any committee. There were no comments on it. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHAYS] has been around here a long time. He knows that was a sham to embarrass the President of the United States, and we are better than that.

I could not let him get away with saying that all those Members voted against the President's budget, because it was a sham and it was a disgrace to the most deliberative body in this country.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, the American people do not just want a balanced budget.

They want a balanced balanced budget.

And the Republican budget—which the President is rightfully resisting—is an unbalanced balanced budget.

The Republican budget is unfairly balanced on the backs of seniors on Medicare.

It is unfairly balanced on the backs of the poor, the disabled and middle class families whose parents benefit from Medicaid.

It is unfairly balanced on the backs of the children of our public schools and students with student loans.

The Republican budget is a load off the backs of corporate welfare recipients, defense contractors, polluters, and all the other Republican special interest groups.

No issue more clearly divides Democrats and Republicans than Medicare and Medicaid reform.

The proposal to block grant Medicaid takes away the guarantee that poor people will receive health care.

At this time in history—when the gap between rich and poor is wider than ever—that is inexcusable.

The block grant proposal is predicated on a blind-faith fantasy, that States will come up with a magic formula, to do much more in health care for the poor with much less money.

If there are any such miracle cures to health care in New York State, I've certainly never heard of them.

And neither has anyone else in the New York hospital system.

What's more, this block grant proposal has no flexibility.

It will be most effective in providing health care for the poor during good economic times, and least effective in recessions, when America needs Medicaid most.

That stands the very purpose of Medicaid on its head.

The Republican Medicare plan is just as reckless, and just as cruel.

Cutting $270 billion out of a program that needs a $90 billion cut to remain solvent—and is so important to so many seniors—is outrageous.

Just as this proposal will hurt Medicaid and Medicare clients/it will also devastate Medicaid and Medicare providers.

Estimates vary, but it is clear that if the Republican plans are enacted, New York State will lose between $40 and $50 billion dollars.

That would endanger the very survival of literally every public hospital in New York City.

Two provisions are of particular concern to the city and State of New York under the Republican Medicare proposal.

They are programs which took decades to evolve and refine.

If they are gutted by these senseless cuts, these programs will be virtually impossible to reconstruct.

The proposal to cut formulas for Medicare graduate medical education and disproportionate share payments would devastate New York's hospitals.

Fifteen percent of all medical residents in the America are educated in New York metropolitan area hospitals.

New York City's hospitals also serve an unusually high proportion of special needs patients: the elderly, the disabled, the chronically ill, and the poor.

Overall Medicare payment rates determine indirect Medical education and disproportionate share payments.

If those payments are reduced because of smaller inflation adjustments, New York's hospitals would be hit with a double whammy.

Graduate Medical Education would be further devastated by new restrictions on training international residents, who comprise 45 percent of all residents.

What country a resident comes from is unimportant as long as he or she is saving American lives.

New York's world-renowned hospital system is struggling to stay afloat TODAY.

These cuts are far in excess of what that system can absorb without catastrophic consequences.

Medicaid cuts will especially hurt New York nursing homes and other long-term care providers, who rely on Medicaid for 90 percent of all payments.

That will trickle down to middle class families, who could be bankrupted by simply giving their parents quality care in their old age.

Mr. Speaker, it comes down to this.

New York State, with 7 percent of the population, would absorb 11 percent of the cuts in Medicare and Medicaid.

New York City, with 2.9 percent of the population, would absorb 6.5 percent of these cuts.

These numbers don't just represent dollars.

These numbers represent lives.

Thousands of lives lost, ruined or needlessly compromised.

There are numbers in this budget that we can cut which will NOT represent lives.

It's time to spare these critically important health care programs for our seniors, our poor, our disabled and our people.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 134, FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS TO ENSURE PAYMENT OF VETERANS BENEFITS

Mr. LINDER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 104–428) on the resolution (H. Res. 317) providing for consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 134) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1996, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1655, INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1996

Mr. LINDER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 104–429) on the resolution (H. Res. 318) waiving points of order against the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 1655) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1996 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government, the Community Management Account, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 134, FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS TO ENSURE PAYMENT OF VETERANS BENEFITS

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 317 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 317

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 134) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1996, and for other purposes. The joint resolution shall be debatable for one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit. The motion to recommit may include instructions only if offered by the Minority Leader or his designee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LINDER] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 317 allows for consideration of House Joint Resolution 134, which will make further continuing appropriation to ensure that our veterans continue to receive the payment of their benefits during the budget negotiations and the current partial Government shutdown. The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations.

The rule also provides for one motion to recommit which may include instructions if offered by the minority leader or his designee.

Earlier this week, the President vetoed the conference report for the VA-HUD appropriations for fiscal year 1996, and as a result, put the Government in the position of reneging on its promise to pay veterans benefits checks. We cannot allow our veterans to lose these benefits, and this Congress will take any action to protect our service men and women and their families.

This is a simple resolution which deals with one specific issue in our Federal budget that we in Congress believe is important enough to merit this action. This resolution provides a temporary solution by ensuring the payment of veterans benefits in the event of a lack of appropriations through fiscal year 1996.

Mr. Speaker, the 3.3 million veterans in the United States and their dependents not only look forward to and need these benefits—they deserve these benefits. If we do not act on this temporary funding measure tonight, our veterans and their dependents who are expecting benefit checks will see a delay in the receipt of these critical funds.

I have co-sponsored this resolution and I strongly support this action to provide our veterans with the benefits that they have earned and rightly deserve. Despite the importance of the budget negotiations to the future of our Nation, there is no arguing that the men and women who have served this Nation do not deserve the financial uncertainty that may occur. Both parties are responsible for putting this Nation into the fiscal mess that we now face, but this resolution shows that we will not punish those who have put their lives on the line to protect the freedoms that we enjoy today.

This resolution was unanimously approved by the Rules Committee and it is a fair resolution that will assure that our veterans receive the benefits they deserve.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I thank my colleague from Georgia for yielding me the customary 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker this continuing resolution is a very small step in the right direction.

This resolution says to American veterans that they should not have to pay the price for this ridiculous game of political brinkmanship my Republican colleagues are playing. What I do not understand Mr. Speaker, is why my Republican colleagues believe the entire country should pay this price.

Why don't my Republican colleagues tell the 383,000 people who are shut out of National Park Service facilities every day that Congress cares about them too?

Why don't my Republican colleagues tell the 80,000 people who are shut out of the Smithsonian and the National Zoo every day that Congress cares about them too?

Why don't my Republican colleagues tell the 2,500 people whose FHA home purchase loans aren't being processed that we care about them too?

As the gentleman from Massachusetts noted up in the Rules Committee earlier this evening, although the Speaker and the Majority Leader supposedly had a very productive discussion with the President, a funny thing happened to the Speaker at the Republican conference, he found out his radical colleagues would rather cut Medicare and Medicaid than keep the Government running. He found out that Members of the Republican Party won't let a continuing resolution come to the floor at all.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the country will support my attempt to defeat the previous question in order to expand this continuing resolution to the entire Government, not just the veterans.

I'm sure the country wants Congressional Republicans to stop these games, leave Medicare alone, and fund the entire Federal Government through January 26.

I urge my colleagues to defeat the previous question.

□ 1900

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is worth pointing out that the State of Arizona has kept the Grand Canyon open by working out an intergovernmental agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOX.].

Mr. FOX of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise to support House Joint Res. 134. This is a bipartisan effort under the leadership of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HUTCHINSON], the chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs' Subcommittee on Hospitals and Health Care, and our chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON]. This legislation would ensure, Mr. Speaker, the payments to more than 3.3. million veterans and their dependents will continue to be made on schedule during the current partial Government shutdown. The bill also ensures vendor payments to contractors who supply the Veterans Administration with products and services vital to the health and the safety of our VA patients.

The Hutchinson-Livingston bill currently has the support of nearly 30 Members of both parties and obviously, by the number of speakers here this evening, many more Members of the House are in support of this important legislation.

The President's veto of the VA-HUD appropriation bill means the veterans' benefit checks will not be paid on time next month, and veterans may be denied needed medical supplies if the partial shutdown continues. The President could have easily signed the bill and avoided putting veterans' benefits at risk and in jeopardy. However, this legislation would solve that problem, and I believe that the Hutchinson-Livingston bill will assure that GI bill benefits, compensation, and pension payments for veterans will continue, as well as dependency payments and indemnity compensation for survivors of veterans are made on schedule.

So, I support this legislation, and, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to unanimously vote for its adoption.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY], the ranking Democratic Member on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, there is not a day that goes by that when I pass the Capitol and take a look at the dome that I am not immensely proud of the privilege that I have of representing the people of my district in this Congress of the United States, in this great Capitol Building. I have profound respect and love for this institution and respect for every Member in it because of what they represent and who they represent. But I have to say there are some times when I get very disappointed about the conduct of this institution and people in this institution, and tonight is one such occasion.

Anybody who knows me knows that I have strong partisan views and I am not afraid to express them. But I think anybody who has worked with me through the years also knows that when it comes to my legislative responsibilities, in dealing with my committee work, that I have always tried to approach that work in a bipartisan way, and I think the record speaks for itself. We produced 9 appropriations subcommittee bills under my chairmanship, all of which were bipartisan, and when I chaired the Committee on Appropriations last year, we produced an allocation of budget resources to all 13 subcommittees, which was a bipartisan allocation.

I think we need that same approach tonight.

Last night the networks told the country that the President, and the Speaker, and Senator DOLE had begun talking again about the budget, and, as the networks showed tonight, Mr. Panetta came down here today expecting to try to negotiate on that and on the question of reopening the Federal Government. We are then told on the nightly news that the Republican caucus, led by the freshmen, decided to reject any effort whatsoever to reopen the Government until a total deal is consummated between the White House and the leadership of the Congress.

As anyone who understands anything about government knows, even if agreement on policy were reached tonight, it would take a good period of time to draft the legislation necessary to reflect that policy.

If we are truly interested in meeting our bipartisan responsibilities, what we would do is pass this motion before us tonight to allow veterans to be paid their benefits, but we would expand it so that all of Government, which is closed down, is opened. The taxpayers deserve to get the services they are paying for from all the workers in the Federal Government, not just those in the Veterans Department.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I will be asking at the appropriate time that we defeat the previous question on this rule tonight so that we can offer a resolution which would allow all of the Government to reopen.

I think it is just fine that this proposal would allow us to pay veterans' benefits, disability, pension, education benefits, but it will not allow us to process new claims for veterans' benefits, it will not allow us to deal with the same 2,000 claims a day that come for those benefits it will not allow us to tell our troops who are on the way to Bosnia that they will be guaranteed their military pay raise this year, their COLA, because we are not opening all of the Government under this resolution.

I have talked to many of you on the majority side of the aisle, and I know you as human beings, and I know that there are a good many of you who do not agree with the idea of keeping Government closed down. I understand the peer pressure that is being put upon you. But I ask you to rise above that tonight and do what is necessary to restore some semblance of respect in the country for our processes in this institution by reopening all of Government and dealing with our divisions on long-term budget policy in a restrained, disciplined, and adult manner. That is the only way in my view that we can earn our pay the way the public expects us to earn our pay.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Glens Falls, NY [Mr. SOLOMON], the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LINDER] for yielding this time to me, and I would just say to my very good friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY], who I have a great deal of respect for, he has been here longer than I have; I have been here for close to 18 years now, I guess; but I just want the gentleman to know, yes, the freshman feel very strongly that we are going to stay here, and we are going to get this job done, we are going to balance this budget. But, as my colleagues know, there are others, too. I feel like an 18-year veteran freshman because I feel the same way.

Mr. Speaker, I have been here during times when Ronald Reagan, when that great President, tried to bring about this revolution. He could not do it because he did not have the control of both Houses. And then I recall a time later on in 1985 when this body had the courage to pass something called Gramm-Rudman. As my colleagues know, that was a balanced budget. That was an attempt to do what we are doing now, to balance the budget over a 5-year period, and even though we did not have the right figures to work with, we were making those cuts.

As my colleagues know, I have a button in my pocket here that says, "It is the spending, stupid," and that is the problem out here.

But my colleagues know we conscientiously, with good Democrats supporting us, passed Gramm-Rudman, and the only problem with it is that in bringing that to a balanced budget over 5 years, we did not make any cuts in years 1, 2, and 3. We only did it in years 4 and 5.

So what happened? The Congress sent out all their press releases, we are going to balance the budget. But then what happened in year 1? We did not have to make the hard cuts, so we got through that, we got through year 2, we got through year 3, and all of a sudden it became too difficult, and we abandoned that attempt to balance the budget.

I am going to say to my friends on the other side of the aisle that is not going to happen this time. No matter what, we are going to balance that budget, and that means staying on the glidepath, staying on that glidepath in the very first year.

Now having said that, that is what I guess I get so upset about, and I am going to be calm here tonight, but when the President then vetoes this bill which has all these benefits in it, it just irritates me because we have to say on that glidepath.

We had a part of the pie which was allocated for the Department of Veterans Affairs, Department of Housing, the Environmental Protection Agency, and all of these other sundry departments, bureaus, and agencies, and we were willing to say to the President, "Please, you tell us how you would like to divide up that part of the pie," and he would not do it. He would not tell us. So we sent him our way that we would divide it up, and do my colleagues know what we did because there is not enough money there for all of these programs? We first determined that the medical care delivery system function of the VA Department of Veterans Affairs had to have about a $550 million increase in order to maintain the veterans hospitals outpatient clinics, et cetera, and in order to get that, then we had to cut and reduce the growth of the other programs like NASA, like EPA, like Department of Housing, and that was our way of staying on this glidepath.

Now the President has vetoed that bill, and that is why we are here today. In doing so we have not reached a conclusion, and the veterans' checks for medical compensation will not be going out unless we pass this piece of legislation.

That is why today, after hearing all this rhetoric out here, I believe everybody is going to come over here, and they are going to vote for this very important bill. We need to do it. We need to do it for these people that have sacrificed their lives for their country, that have come home wounded and disabled, and that is where most of this money will go. This continuing resolution would allow them to get their checks on time.

So let us put aside the rhetoric, let us go ahead and pass this bill and make sure that those checks go out on the 1st of January.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY].

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, the rule we are considering today is a very good rule. American veterans should not have to pay the price for the Republican inability to pass appropriations bills, nor do I think the American people should be used as pawns in a political game.

That's why I will be supporting the effort to defeat the previous question so that we can expand this continuing resolution to the entire Government not just the veterans. And everyone in this Chamber will have a chance to vote for that amendment to stop these games and fund the entire Federal Government through January 26.

I look forward to seeing all of my colleagues put politics aside and vote against the previous question so we can offer an amendment to fund the entire Government.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SCARBOROUGH].

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LINDER] for yielding this time to me, and I think it is important that we clarify a few things.

First of all, we are not here tonight because of Congress' inability to pass an appropriation bill regarding veterans. We have done that. It is the President who vetoed it for his own political purposes, and that is why the Republican Congress has had to come forward with help, with bipartisan help, on the Committee on Rules to pass this important rule.

The national parks. I heard somebody complain about the national parks being closed. We did our job, we passed the bill; the President vetoed it.

The employees of Commerce, State, and Justice did not work today, not because we did not do our job. We passed the bill; the President vetoed it.

VA-HUD, EPA, Independent Agencies; all of these agencies would be open today but for the fact that the President of the United States did not sign into law the appropriation bills that we passed.

We did our job, and now if I can address comments from the gentleman from Wisconsin who stated, and I quote, that he is disappointed in the conduct of Congress tonight.

I respectfully would state to the gentleman that Americans who elected me and Americans who swept the Republicans into Congress for the first time in 40 years have been disappointed in the conduct of this institution over the past 40 years, not just tonight, but over the past 40 years, when we only managed to balance the budget one time in 40 years.

As far as respecting, and I am quoting again, "Respecting the process in Congress and moving forward in a restrained, disciplined manner," let me ask what is so restrained and disciplined about passing deficit bills for 40 years; of running up a $4.9 trillion debt? If that is discipline, if that is restraint, then count me out. There is nothing restrained or disciplined about that.

We are here tonight as part of a bigger showdown. The one thing that I hope all of us in this Chamber can agree on, and I see the gentleman from Mississippi, SONNY MONTGOMERY, a champion of veterans for years, a Democrat, who has been out front on it, what I hope we can all do tonight is unite together and make sure those veterans that sacrificed for this country to protect and defend the Constitution, hope that they will not be left out in the lurch tonight.

I hope we can join together, pass this important rule, and pass this bill. The veterans should not be part of this political battle simply because the President of the United states did not like environmental policies of the Republican party. We need to separate them. Veterans' benefits should not be held hostage. The veterans earned it, they sacrificed, they stayed away from their families.

I hear a lot of Members whining about not being with their families this year. Think about the future veterans who are in Bosnia tonight. That is the sacrifice veterans have been doing. We need to protect veterans' rights.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR].

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, we had an agreement.

Last night, the President agreed to sit down and talk. The Senate majority leader agreed to sit down and talk. Even the Speaker of the House agreed to sit down and talk.

They had a deal.

They had a commitment to go forward.

But the Speaker is not willing or able to keep that commitment today. Why?

Because a small minority in this House, who don't represent the views of the people, who don't represent the views of this House, who don't represent the mainstream of America, who want to shut down this Government, and force their priorities on the American people.

The only reason the Government is shut down tonight is because 73 militant freshman Republicans can't get their way.

And once again, national parks are closed.

Benefit checks for 3.3 million veterans are threatened; 60,000 students and parents applying for Pell Grants and student loans are being denied.

Small businesses have not received the loans they need.

And hundreds of calls to the EPA's hotline for drinking water contamination have gone unanswered.

All because a small group of extreme Republicans are holding America hostage.

And what are they holding out for?

Tax breaks for the wealthiest people and the wealthiest corporations in America, paid for by extreme cuts in Medicare, Medicaid, education, and the environment.

In other words, they are holding out for the biggest transfer in income—from the middle class to the wealthy—in the history of America.

The Speaker gave his word last night—that the talks would start—that we would move forward, but today, he can't or won't deliver.

Who is in control here?

Who speaks for the Republican Party?

Does the Speaker expect us to believe that he can't persuade his own membership to stand behind his word?

This is a sad and irresponsible act by a party who claims to be leading a second American revolution.

Mr. Speaker we are 5 days away from Christmas.

For many of us, this holiday is about more than just gifts and reindeer.

It's one of the most sacred and joyous religious holidays of the year.

It's a time to celebrate our faith and a time to hold close to our families.

It is a disgrace to watch this spectacle of partisan gamesmanship overshadow one of the most holy days of the year.

For over 200,000 families who have been shut out of work today, they are facing the Christmas season without another paycheck.

It is wrong to hold these people hostage.

It is wrong to hold our Government hostage.

It is wrong to hold this Nation hostage to the views of an extreme minority who are trying to force their way.

The American people deserve better.

Defeat the previous question and get America back to work.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYWORTH].

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to our friend, the minority whip, who used the phrase "partisan gamesmanship." I think that accurately describes the diatribe which he launched here from this well just a few moments ago; this mindless mantra, always dealing with fiction rather than fact, and now separating out the newest Members of the House, those who made a new majority and who, Mr. Speaker, if we are extreme, are only extreme in terms of making extremely good sense.

The gentleman noted the spiritual significance of the days coming now. At the risk of being politically incorrect, I would offer this scriptural admonition, for He whose birth we will celebrate in a few days said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." So let us give our children the chance for a meaningful future. Let us give this entire Nation a chance to survive and prosper into the next century and beyond. Let us also give our veterans, those who have served with distinction, the benefits they deserve.

No, the gamesmanship and the interesting interpretations of what transpires in this body are best left to the fiction writers. The American people will understand the fiction inherent in the comments of the gentleman from Michigan. Members of Congress will recognize their responsibility to pass this rule, and to pass this legislation, and to ensure that our veterans are provided for, and indeed, this entire Nation is provided for.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK].

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the Republicans' problem is with the Constitution. They want to make very drastic, extreme changes in programs like Medicaid and environmental protection, and they do not have the votes, so they have decided to take the Government hostage. But they are getting a little heat. They did not have a game plan.

So what do they do? They come up now and say, "We will let the veterans' checks get paid, but we will not let the EPA function, we will not let housing authorities function so veterans who live in housing will be hurt, but we will let the VA function." So now I understand their game plan. It is literally a game plan. This one is "Red Rover, Red Rover, let the Veterans' Department come over," and then we will do that. Tomorrow, we will hear from another group that is complaining, and it will be time to "Let the housing department come over."

I do not know what has come over them, but it certainly is not rational government.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HUTCHINSON].

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would say to the previous speaker that it is not a game at all. The reason we are in the situation that we are in right now is because President Clinton determined that he would veto a very good and very fair veterans' appropriation bill. We did our job. We are faced with the dilemma we are tonight faced with because he chose to veto that bill.

A previous speaker referred to this as a game of brinksmanship. It is not a game of brinksmanship. It is not a game of dare. It is not a game at all. There are very high stakes about what this is all concerned with. That is the future of this Nation, the future of our children, the future of our grandchildren, what kind of hope we are going to give them, what kind of life and what kind of standard of living our veterans are going to have.

It has saddened me deeply that the President, who hails from my State, has chosen, has gone to the lengths of using every vulnerable part of our society as pawns in this budget debate: little children and their school lunches; students and their loans; the disabled, as if they are going to be thrown in the streets; senior citizens, as if they are going to lose their Medicare; and now, the veterans of this Nation, used as pawns.

Tragically enough, the usual bipartisan support that has existed for veterans of this country has begun to unravel as the VA has become more and more politicized, attacking those in good faith who want to tend and care for our veterans, a concerned campaign to scare the most vulnerable.

There was a veto. Had it not been for that veto, we would not face this situation that we face right now. We would have the veterans cared for. What was vetoed was this: An appropriation bill that in 1996 would have provided $399 million more for medical care than the 1995 level, a total of $16.5 billion; medical research would increase $5 million, to $257 million.

During the next 7 years, more than $275 billion will be spent on veterans' programs under our appropriation bill. That is $40 billion more than was spent during the last 7 years. We increase veterans' programs by $40 billion at a time that the VA population, the veteran population, will be decreasing. That reflects a deep commitment for the welfare of our veterans.

In spite of that appropriation bill being vetoed, tonight we will do the responsible thing and we will pass this CR to ensure that not one veteran's benefit check is delayed even 1 day, in spite of the President's veto. I urge support.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I come to this floor to plead with people to please, please, let us have a Christmas truce. Yes, I am very pleased Members are going to open the gates finally for veterans, and not hold them hostage in this incredible war on the budget. But what are you going to say to small business men who cannot get their loans and need to be moving forward? What are you going to say to students who need to be making their plans for going on to school, over 60,000 of them? What about the Federal workers whose lives have been put into a total tailspin, not knowing what is going on. What about the parks? Why are these people guilty? Why are they the hostages of this budget war? Why should they be the hostages?

Mr. Speaker, I am from Northern Ireland. That is where my relatives come from. They used to even be able to have peace during the Christmas period, and they have been fighting forever. We now see in Bosnia all sorts of groups met in Dayton, OH, and they were able to come up with some kind of a peace. These folks should not be held hostage while these negotiations go on and while people argue about how big is the table, how many people get to sit there, what kind of food, where are we going to have the meeting. What is going on? Petty, petty, petty stuff. We cannot even get the thing launched and going.

To say to Americans who all work for this same flag, who all pay money to this flag as taxpayers, and who all think it means something, they have got to be really asking questions when for the second time this year, 3 months into the fiscal year, we are slamming the door shut again. I am pleased that we are opening it for veterans, but please, vote against the previous question so we can open the door for all, and in the name of the season and in the name of shedding the rhetoric, let us not hold hostage innocent people who do not have a dog in this fight.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BACHUS].

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, many years ago there was written on a wall in Gibraltar these words:

God and the soldier all men adore;
In time of trouble and not before.
When trouble is gone, and all wrongs are righted,
God is forgotten, and the old soldier slighted.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, today the President once again insulted and offended and slighted our military men and our veterans when he stood up and claimed that it was Republicans who were preventing their benefit checks from being mailed to them, their dependents and their widows.

Mr. Speaker, the President has offended our veterans on many, many occasions, and I think our veterans have tried to overlook this in the past. When he told his draft board many years ago that he was too educated to fight, to wear the uniform, they overlooked that. We all said, he was young, those of us who did serve, and we overlooked that. We excused the fact that he went to England and he led demonstrations. He was young. It was his right to lead demonstrations.

Then, when he became our President and we had doubts, then we started hearing that his staff and the staff of the First Lady showed open disdain for our military fighting men at the White House, and it again made us question this President and his respect for our fighting men.

Then sadly, recently, he sent our fighting men and women into harm's way in Bosnia, and many of us questioned that. We questioned the fact that when he was at the University of Arkansas, he told Colonel Holmes, we should not be involved in a civil war, they are dangerous. Yet, he sent our fighting men and women into an ancient civil war.

More recently, he wrote in his journal, and later affirmed that he still believed this, that:

> From my work, I came to believe that no government rooted in democracy should have the power to make its citizens fight and kill and die in a war they oppose, a war which, in any case, does not involve immediately the peace and freedom of the Nation.

Does he believe now that we should not send our fighting men and women into a war that does not involve immediately the peace and freedom of the Nation? Regardless, that is what he has done.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker has brought into question the patriotism of the President of the United States. I would like to point out to the people on the other side the old saying that "People in glass houses should not throw stones."

Of the current elected Republican leadership of the House, not a single Member of the elected leadership of the Republican House has served in the military. The Speaker did not serve in the military. The majority leader did not serve in the military. The whip did not serve in the military. My counterpart, the chairman of the Republican Campaign Committee, did not serve in the military.

On the Democratic side, the minority leader [Mr. GEPHARDT] served in the military. The minority whip [Mr. BONIOR], served in the military. I served in the military.

I resent the remarks made by the previous speaker, directed at the President of the United States, and I would suggest that he direct those remarks to the Members of his own leadership who chose not to serve in the military.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I might point out that none of those Republican leaders sent people into a war zone.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GOSS].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LINDER] for yielding me this time.

I do not claim to have been in leadership here, but I did serve in the Army, and I was proud to do it, and I am very concerned about the veterans.

Mr. Speaker, Americans need to understand that the reason many Federal agencies—including the administrative services of the Veterans' Administration—are closed today is because our President, President Clinton, vetoed three major appropriations bills that were sent to him last week, before the shutdown began. It appears that he vetoed those bills to score political points. We can only assume that he did so in order to evade serious discussions about balancing the budget in 7 years. Regardless of all the propaganda coming out of the White House, there is no escaping the facts: If the President had done his job and signed those spending bills on time, we would not be facing yet another day of Federal shutdown of this magnitude, and our Nation's veterans would not be worried about receiving their benefit checks on time this month. However, because our President vetoed those bills and because President Clinton still refuses to come to the table with a balanced budget proposal using real numbers and meeting the 7-year commitment that he agreed to, we now are taking steps to provide limited spending authority on behalf of our Nation's veterans. House Joint Resolution 134 will provide the funds necessary to keeping veterans' services up and running throughout this negotiations process. We know the shutdown has been difficult for many Americans besides veterans and we are willing to keep working at the discussions to bring this stalemate to an end. All we need is for the President to stop the posturing and come to the table in good faith—and remain true to his word.

If the President spent more time at the negotiating conference and less time at the press conference, I believe we would get the job done.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DOGGETT].

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I think if we needed any example of why it is we have the mess in Washington that we have tonight, it has been provided by some of the speakers among our Republican colleagues, people that come here wanting to even old political scores instead of trying to even up the budget and get the Government back to work. It is wrong.

America wants to put an end to the politics and to have a little good sense and maybe even a tad of goodwill at this time of the year.

It has been said that we would not have this problem if the President had not vetoed a particular piece of legislation. Thank heavens he had the courage to do that, because that is a piece of legislation that a majority of this House, including a number of Members from the Republican side, voted to recommit with instructions that over $200 million added in medical benefits and health care benefits for our veterans.

After a lot of arm-twisting, some of our Republican colleagues backed off of the bill and brought it back without those resources in it.

This is a bill our veterans can understand that the President vetoed. It is a bill that provided for unilateral disarmament. It required a tremendous cut in the law enforcement powers to enforce our clean air and our clean water. Thank heavens the President had the courage to veto that bill and then to say, as with some of these other measures, let us keep the Government going. Let us protect our veterans and our clean air and our clean water by operating the Government instead of having a high-jack or a blackmail with reference to that.

Yet, I read, as did the thousands of veterans in Austin, TX in today's paper, that unless this Congress acted by tomorrow, they would not get the benefits that they worked for and deserve.

Mr. Speaker, they are not the only people. In Texas, because of the inaction of this Republican majority, Texas will not get $24 million for child support enforcement. I think our veterans are important, but I think it is important to take care of child support; and the same thing is true of "workfare" and child care as well. We need to get this Government going again, not just to take care of one problem, but take care of all of them.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUSEN].

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I rise in strong support of both the rule and the resolution. As a member of the Appropriations Subcommittee on VA-HUD and Independent Agencies that provides funding for our veterans, I want to make it clear, we did our job, we passed our bill, we provided for our Nation's veterans. For some to suggest otherwise, I think is an outrage.

Surely the President must have well understood when he vetoed the VA-HUD bill on Monday that in fact he was jeopardizing health benefit checks for our veterans. Frankly, we would not be here today had the President signed the VA-HUD bill and these other appropriations bills. Without the support of the President, we are taking this necessary action to honor our financial commitment to our veterans. Our veterans deserve nothing less. We need to support the rule and the bill.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested the last couple of days that the shutdown of the Federal Government by the Republicans is a matter of high principle, but apparently that is not so, because if you have the strength of the veterans' lobbies and you have the concerns of this Congress that we have for veterans, you can escape that. But if you are trying to refinance your home or you are trying to buy your first home or you are trying to provide for your family, you will be out of luck.

This is not a matter of high principle; this is again another temper tantrum. The first temper tantrum was thrown by the Speaker; the second is now by the Republican caucus that insists that if they do not get their way at the outset of the talks, then the Government must be shut down.

Mr. Speaker, we are here rewarding veterans for their service to this country to protect a democracy. Dictating the terms at the outset of negotiations is not in keeping with the democratic spirit or principles of this Government. So I think we ought to understand why we are here.

The President had the courage to veto a very bad bill; the Republicans do not have the courage to face the consequences, and yet they want to dictate the terms of the shutdown of the Federal Government.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN].

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker, I would urge that we vote against this rule, because veterans, every veteran is a former public servant, every veteran is a citizen, every veteran is a taxpayer.

Veterans do not just care about their own benefit checks, they care about the Federal workers that have been locked out of their jobs that cannot provide Christmas for their families this week. They care about the other Americans who are denied services because the Government is shut down, and they care about the other taxpayers, taxpayers who will pay out, as of today, $900 million to Federal employees to not work.

Federal employees want to be on the job, and yet every Republican on the Committee on Rules voted against an amendment that I offered that would let Federal employees go to work and then get paid subsequently, and those who chose not to go to work would not get reimbursed, but at least we would not be paying money for people not to work. I cannot believe we are creating this situation where we now are going to pay almost $1 billion for no work performed.

We have an opportunity tonight to rectify an unconscionable situation, unconscionable to Federal employees, to taxpayers, to the entire American public. We ought to do it, do it now, add it to this rule. But without it being added to the rule, we ought to vote it down.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

Mr. de la GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I am getting tired of finger-pointing, blaming the President and Mrs. Clinton for everything that is happening.

My friends, we are here tonight on the verge of closing the Government because you did not pass the appropriations bills in time. That is the main reason. It is a legislative failure, Mr. Speaker; the Republicans failed.

I have told my colleagues, and I will tell them again, my colleagues waited 40 years to be in power and they have messed it up the first year.

☐ 1945

You did not pass the appropriation bills in time. You are saying the President vetoed them this week.

Where were you when the fiscal year ended? You have the majority. You have an overwhelming majority, and the veterans and the people of this country should know it was a legislative failure.

It has nothing to do with the President. He does not legislate it. You, my friends, messed it up. You messed it up royally. You cannot blame it on the President. It was pure simple legislative failure and you made it fail.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, the President vetoed the bill. We did not veto the bill. The President vetoed the bill. I think America should know that.

Let me just talk about something else that came to my attention tonight that really concerns me. I went to a conference that the Republicans had today and we were unanimous, like a fist of steel, we are unanimous, 235, that we are going to get a balanced budget in 7 years using CBO figures. But I watched television tonight, and I saw Tom Brokaw and Dan Rather and their people saying that our party is split all to heck and that NEWT GINGRICH cannot lead, and it is all because of the freshmen that we have this problem.

Let me tell Dan Rather and Peter Jennings and Tom Brokaw and the Democrats and the President, and anybody else, we are united. We want a balanced budget in 7 years using CBO figures and we will not be deterred. I do not care what you guys tell the media. The media was spewing out exactly what the Democrats have been telling the people tonight. It is wrong.

We are united, we are not going to deviate. We are going to get a balanced budget in 7 years using CBO figures or else. I just want to tell everybody that I get a little bit concerned when I see the national media spewing out garbage that I know to be false. We had a conference today and when NEWT GINGRICH walked into that room, he got a standing ovation. Everybody applauded. And yet they keep telling us on television, he cannot lead our party.

He is leading our party, he is doing a great job. We are united. So, Mr. President, Mr. Brokaw, Mr. Jennings, Mr. Rather, my Democrat colleagues, we are united, we are going to get it one way or another, and we are not going to pass any more CRs until we do.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, evidently what the previous speaker is saying is they have not been able to fool the public, they have not been able to fool the President, they have not been able to fool the press, and somehow it is somebody's fault but not their own.

If you want to know why your position is not selling, if you want to know why you are in trouble, look in the mirror. It is because of the way you have been acting. Do not blame somebody else for your own failure to meet your responsibilities. People know what you are doing. They have caught on. They do not like it and they want you to change it.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, this is a sad situation. I do not take any comfort in standing in this well realizing that a quarter of a million Federal employees have been sent home.

Some people on the Republican side of the aisle believe that this is part of a grand political strategy. They say it is a matter of principle. If it is a matter of principle, you should put your own paychecks on the line, not the paychecks of innocent Federal employees who showed up for work ready to do their job and were sent home to an uncertain future and, for many of them, an unhappy Christmas season.

But the sad fact of the matter is, neither Speaker NEWT GINGRICH nor any of the Republican leaders has been willing to put his paycheck on the line and say, as a matter of principle, "I will not get paid until this budget crisis is over." No, you will all be in line to get your checks but you say to a quarter of a million Federal employees, "You are the ones who will have to sacrifice for principle."

So tonight comes this resolution because, quite frankly, we all honor the veterans. We want to do our best by them, and maybe inadvertently, but certainly you have to admit it is a fact, the veterans are losing out because of the Republican strategy. They may not get their checks in time, and the Republicans are afraid of that. They are afraid of facing veterans' groups, trying to explain how this crazy strategy of theirs did not penalize any Republican Members of Congress but may have penalized some veterans unwittingly.

I will be with you on the veterans, but let me tell you, do not forget the other people you are hurting.

When you suspend medical research at the National Institutes of Health, you are hurting every family in America. When you suspend the awarding of Pell grants and student loans to kids from working families, you are hurting every family in America. When you suspend the activities of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, you are saying to families who have been dreaming for a lifetime that they might own their own home, "Wait until Newt is ready." That is unfair.

If it is a matter of principle, put your own paycheck on the line. Do not put the paychecks of 250,000 innocent Federal employees on the line. Support "no budget, no pay." It is the only way to end this crisis.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. STEARNS].

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, what kind of message are we sending tonight to those currently stationed in various war zones around the world?

We really should not be blaming each other, no matter what party we are from.

All of us should urge passage of this legislation. I think it is clear tonight, if the President had signed the VA-HUD bill, we would not be in this sorry position that we are in here tonight. We would not have to have a continuing resolution to ensure that our veterans receive their rightful and hard-earned benefits.

I could sit here tonight and blame you and you could blame us. But tonight we should all come together and pass this continuing resolution. Maybe the President had a good reason to not sign the VA-HUD appropriations bill. Maybe he had his reasons and maybe a lot of you agree with him, but I have been here before when I saw you provide a VA-HUD bill that we did not like.

But now the bickering is over. There is no use screaming and hollering. Let us think about our veterans first and let us proceed and pass this continuing resolution. But, frankly, I think all of us should realize that this problem can be solved by the President signing the VA-HUD appropriations bill; we would not be here tonight this close to Christmas discussing this if he had signed the VA-HUD appropriation bill.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Ms. DELAURO].

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of our veterans and against the previous question.

I am pleased that America's veterans will not be held hostage to the budget impasse. What I do not understand is why Republicans are willing to make this concession for veterans but not for the 250,000 Federal employees who are out of work because of the shutdown.

As we embark on the holiday season, I ask my Republican colleagues to think about those 250,000 families.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN] came to the floor yesterday and put a human face on the Government shutdown when he told a story about his visit to a local elementary school. He said that the teachers told him that the children were not enjoying the holidays as they had in the past.

Why are these children not enjoying the holidays? Because many of their parents are Federal employees, hard-working men and women who now find themselves out of work at Christmastime. They want to be working.

And the children? They hear their parents fighting, they know that Mom and Dad are not working. They listen to their parents explain that this will be a lean Christmas because they do not know when or if they will get their next paycheck.

It is right that we are making certain that veterns do not suffer because the Republican majority failed to produce a budget. Now it is time to summon the same compassion for the 250,000 families who are the unfortunate pawns in Speaker GINGRICH's game of budget blackmail.

The Speaker would have you believe that he did not want to break his promise to the President to reopen the Government. He claims that the extremists in his party forced his hand. But we all know that this extreme agenda is the Speaker's agenda, to cut Medicare and Medicaid and education to pay for a tax break for the wealthiest Americans.

Mr. Speaker, give Americans an early Christmas present, a budget that reflects their priorities and not yours.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WELDON].

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the President of the United States had the opportunity to sign an appropriations bill that we presented to him which would have funded the Veterans Administration, as well as the Department of Housing and Urban Development, as well as NASA.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas for a point of order.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has removed the button from his lapel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida may proceed.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. I thank the Speaker.

Again I would like to resume and just point out that the President had the opportunity to fund NASA. He had the opportunity to fund the VA. And he chose not to. He chose to veto that bill. Today we have a good piece of legislation before us here which will at least keep the veterans' checks going to our needy veterans, the veterans in District 15 of Florida that need them.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation and I rise in strong support of the rule.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. THURMAN].

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is time to stop the suffering of the people. But, that can be done only if we bring a clean continuing resolution to the House floor tonight.

Is the other side afraid of the outcome of a vote on a straight, clean CR? If not, then give the House a chance. Straight. Up or down.

A month ago, we exempted from this Republican-imposed government shutdown the Federal workers who help people on social security. Tonight, we are helping veterans.

Who is next? What about the first-time home buyer whose HUD loan cannot be approved by the end of the month? What about the senior citizen who needs a simple hot meal once a day? Or the student applying for a college loan?

These programs also are affected by the inaction of the other side of the aisle. My Democratic colleagues colleagues and I are willing to keep vital functions operating during budget negotiations. A shutdown is not necessary for negotiations. Indeed, a shutdown could have been avoided if, as in the 103d Congress, the majority had passed its appropriations bills by mid-November.

Because I support not only veterans but also new home buyers, needy students, and senior citizens, I urge Members of good will toward their fellow Americans to pass a clean CR tonight.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I have one speaker left, and I reserve the right to close.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire the amount of time I have remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] has 3½ minutes remaining.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GEJDENSON].

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, by the action of the Republicans this evening, we see how easy it would be to make whole all the Federal employees, all the people out there looking for services, while we continue to negotiate an agreement for 7 years. There virtually is no difference in spending in 1996.

We are going to take care of veterans' benefits in this one instance. But if you are a veteran working for the Federal Government in one of the other agencies that shut down tonight, you are not getting a paycheck or you are in limbo at the moment. If you are a veteran trying to get a new student loan, you cannot get that student loan because we are taking care of one small group of veterans as compared to all the veterans out there asking for Federal services.

If you are a veteran looking for an SBA loan to bridge some spending for your company or to help you reorganize so you can keep your business and your family together, you do not have any Government services today. Veterans who are waiting for the benefits of biomedical research are left out. We need to solve all our country's problems and the veterans', and we could do it tonight.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute and 30 seconds to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

My. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, Americans, as I said earlier today, are distressed. They are angry. They do not understand why adult, presumably responsible, individuals they have sent to represent them from 435 districts throughout America cannot honestly debate and come to resolve the differences between them and, indeed, to compromise.

Our Speaker has said that he will cooperate but not compromise. There is not an American who lives who has been in a family who knows that compromise is essential if those with differences are to make progress.

We have shut down a portion of the Government. Not only will it not solve the budget deficit problem, it will add to it. There is a cost to doing that. Those of you on your side of the aisle talk about privatize, go and contract out and in fact we have done that. A lot of people talk about Federal employees, but let me tell you, there are a lot of contractors out there for NASA, somebody mentioned NASA, who have been told, you cannot work. They and their employees are not drawing a salary. And notwithstanding Mr. GINGRICH's letter, nobody is saying they are going to be reimbursed. My colleagues, America expects of us responsibility. America expects us to act in a fashion which will bring credit to our Government and to our country. I am going to vote for this resolution but it ought to be a resolution affect go all of the Government that is shut down.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged resolution. When would be the proper time to bring it before this body?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not respond to that at this point without knowledge of the resolution.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST].

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker. I urge a note vote on the previous question. If the previous question is defeated, I shall offer an amendment to the rule which would make in order the text of House Joint Resolution 131. This resolution would provide for a clean continuing resolution that would fund the Government through January 26th and would also provide for the military pay raise and retiree COLA provided for in the Defense authorization bill that was passed by the House earlier this month. This amendment is in addition to the continuation of veterans' benefits. I include the text of the amendment at this point in the RECORD.

H.J. RES. 131

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 106(c) of Public Law 104–56 is amended by striking "December 15, 1995" and inserting "January 26, 1996".

SEC. 2. MILITARY PAY RAISE FOR FISCAL YEAR 1996.

(a) WAIVER OF SECTION 1009 ADJUSTMENT.—Any adjustment required by section 1009 of title 37, United States Code, in elements of compensation of members of the uniformed services to become effective during fiscal year 1996 shall not be made.

(b) INCREASE IN BASIC PAY AND BAS.—Effective on January 1, 1996, the rates of basic pay and basic allowance for subsistence of members of the uniformed services are increased by 2.4 percent.

(c) INCREASE IN BAQ.—Effective on January 1, 1996, the rates of basic allowance for quarters of members of the uniformed services are increased by 5.2 percent.

SEC. 3. ELIMINATION OF DISPARITY BETWEEN EFFECTIVE DATES FOR MILITARY AND CIVILIAN RETIREE COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1996.

(A) IN GENERAL.—The fiscal year 1996 increase in military retired pay shall (notwithstanding subparagraph (B) of section 1401a(b)(2) of title 10, United States Code) first be payable as part of such retired pay for the month of March 1996.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of subsection (a):

(1) The term "fiscal year 1996 increase in military retired pay" means the increase in retired pay that, pursuant to paragraph (1) of section 1401a(b) of title 10, United States Code, becomes effective on December 1, 1995.

(2) The term "retired pay" includes retainer pay.

(c) FINANCING.—The Secretary of Defense shall transfer, from any other funds made available to the Department of Defense, such sums as may be necessary for payment to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund solely for the purpose of offsetting the estimated increase in outlays to be made from such Fund in fiscal year 1996 by reason of the provisions of subsection (a). Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the transfer authority made available to the Secretary in Public Law 104–61 or any other law shall be increased by the amounts required to carry out the provisions of this section.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. LINDER], is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, one of the first persons to speak on this rule noted that the networks told the country last night that we would be working again. A two-hour meeting in the White House with our leadership led us to believe that was the case.

The morning papers all said that the President has agreed to put on the table his specific budget proposal using CBO numbers and shortly thereafter the Vice President spoke and said, no, we are not going to do that.

We have not just 73 Republican freshmen but 236 members of a caucus that is still growing that are very, very frustrated in trying to reach a balanced budget in 7 years using honest numbers. We are not only frustrated but we are united that we will balance the budget using honest numbers in 7 years and we will do it now.

This administration has had so many different positions on this issue that it is hardly worth recounting, but it reminds me, dealing with this administration reminds me of duck hunting. You get off in the wind, because every time you see a target it moves and the wind changes it.

Virtually every speaker on this rule tonight voted against the balanced budget amendment, the coalition's balanced budget and our balanced budget. We are faced not with Members who want to balance the budget under different terms but with Members who want to spend more money, liberal extremists who want to spend more money. And that is what the whole thing is about.

We should have gotten off the discussion of whose numbers we use and just say we are not going to spend more than $12 trillion. Sit down at the table with us, argue priorities, but we are not going to continue to spend money that we have not raised. That is our children and grandchildren's money. There is not a program in this budget that cannot be defended by somebody, but we should not be spending it if we have not raised it.

We have for 30 years voted ourselves wishes and dreams over needs and passed the bill on to future generations. And this Republican majority said that is going to stop.

Much has happened; much movement has occurred. We now are all discussing a 7-year balanced budget and by the time this weekend or early next week passes, we will be talking about using the same numbers. I think by the end of the year, we will have passed and the President will have signed a 7-year balanced budget with honest numbers and we will have done our children and grandchildren a great service. It is time.

Frankly, the numbers are not that far apart. We want to increase spending 3 percent; the President wants to increase it 4 percent. We want to presume an additional 5 percent revenue; the President wants to presume 5.5. The numbers are not that far apart.

We can get together if we will just sit down and honestly and straightforwardly look each other in the eye and say, where are your priorities? The President's budget is not on the table using the same numbers, even though he has said he would do that. So this effort tonight under this rule is merely to say for those veterans who have served their nation, who have earned their benefits, we are going to pass a continuing resolution to assure that you will get your checks. We are not inclined to pass a continuing resolution for the rest of the government because it will take entirely the pressure off the President. The last time we did that, under certain assurances, 30 days went by where we were hammered and demagogued with our specific numbers; $30 million was spent by unions trashing our specifics in our districts where we have marginal districts for freshmen. We are not going to do that again. We are going to keep the feet to the fire.

It is unfortunate that decent, hardworking, honest Federal employees are caught in this pinch. But the President, seemingly to bolster the notion in this country that he believes something, has chosen to pitch a battle with the Congress of the United States. It seems to have helped him in the polls and he seems to think that is the thing to get reelected on so he will continue to veto and we will continue to have this problem. But I tell my colleagues, from our point of view, we are united. We were sent here to change the economic direction of this nation, to balance the budget for our children and grandchildren. We intend to do that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule XV, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the question of agreeing to the resolution.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 238, nays 172, not voting 23, as follows:

□ 2028

Ms. BROWN of Florida changed her vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. SKELTON and Mr. PICKETT changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the previous question was ordered.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

□ 2030

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, I was here during the entire last vote. I put my card in and pushed the button. It apparently did not record. If it would have recorded, it would have recorded a "yes" vote.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on House Joint Resolution 134, and that I may include tabular and extraneous material.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 4, PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY AND WORK OPPORTUNITY ACT OF 1995

Mr. ARCHER laid before the House a conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 4) to restore the American family, reduce illegitimacy, control welfare spending and reduce welfare dependence:

(The conference report on H.R. 4 will appear in a subsequent issue of the RECORD.)

REQUEST FOR PERMISSION TO AMEND HOUSE RESOLUTION 317

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the rule just passed be amended to read as follows:

> It shall be also in order to consider an amendment by the minority leader or his designee adding at the end of House Joint Resolution 134 a new title II consisting of the text of House Joint Resolution 131, continuing funds for many critical Federal departments through January 26, 1996, and authorizing a 2.4 percent pay raise for the Armed Forces of the United States. All points of order shall be waived against such an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Under the guidelines consistently issued by successive Speakers as recorded on page 534 of the House Rules Manual, specifically the guideline of November 14, 1991, the Chair is constrained not to entertain the gentleman's request until it has been cleared by the bipartisan floor and committee leadership.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I would urge the Speaker to clear that request.

FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS TO ENSURE PAYMENTS OF VETERANS BENEFITS

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 317, I call up the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 134) making further continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1996, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The text of the joint resolution is as follows:

H.J. RES. 134

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and out of applicable corporate or other revenues, receipts, and funds, for the several departments, agencies, corporations and other organizational units of Government for the fiscal year 1996, and for other purposes, namely:

SEC. 101. ENSURED PAYMENT DURING FISCAL YEAR 1996 OF VETERANS' BENEFITS IN EVENT OF LACK OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) PAYMENTS REQUIRED.—In any case during fiscal year 1996 in which appropriations are not otherwise available for programs, projects, and activities of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall nevertheless ensure that—

(1) payments of existing veterans benefits are made in accordance with regular procedures and schedules and in accordance with eligibility requirements for such benefits; and

(2) payments to contractors of the Veterans Health Administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs are made when due in the case of services provided that directly relate to patient health and safety.

(b) FUNDING.—There is hereby appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the payments pursuant to subsection (a), including such amounts as may be necessary for the costs of administration of such payments.

(c) CHARGING OF ACCOUNTS WHEN APPROPRIATIONS MADE.—In any case in which the Secretary uses the authority of subsection (a) to make payments, applicable accounts shall be charged for amounts so paid, and for the costs of administration of such payments, when regular appropriations become available for those purposes.

(d) EXISTING BENEFITS SPECIFIED.—For purposes of this section, existing veterans benefits are benefits under laws administered by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs that have been adjudicated and authorized for payment as of—

(1) December 15, 1995; or

(2) if appropriations for such benefits are available (other than pursuant to subsection(b)) after December 15, 1995, the last day on which appropriations for payment of such benefits are available (other than pursuant to subsection (b)).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 317, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I bring to the floor a continuing resolution for certain activities of the Department of Veterans Affairs. This continuing resolution would only have effect in fiscal year 1996 during periods when appropriations are otherwise not available. This is the situation we are in right now. If the regular bill or another CR is enacted, then this particular continuing resolution would not be operable.

The activities provided for in this continuing resolution are payments for compensation, pensions, and educational benefits within the Department of Veterans Affairs. In addition, it also provides for payments to contractors for services that directly relate to patient health and safety. It also provides for the necessary administrative expenses to carry out these activities.

Mr. Speaker, this continuing resolution will assure that veterans benefits checks will be received on time, at the end of the month, and in the full amount authorized. Let me stress, had the President not vetoed the VA–HUD bill, this continuing resolution would not have been necessary and these benefits would have been paid. These benefits would have been paid and this CR would not have been necessary if the President had not vetoed the VA–HUD bill. Once again, these benefits would have been paid if the President had not vetoed the VA–HUD bill. I want everybody to understand it. He vetoed it. That is why we are here today. The President vetoed it.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all my friends and colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, two more points. This bill is necessary because the President vetoed the VA–HUD bill, but it would not be necessary to progress through both houses and be enacted into law if the President would, in good faith, come to the bargaining table, reach a final agreement on a 7-year balanced budget, according to Congressional Budget Office numbers, and put this whole deal to bed and let us get out of here. But so far that is not happening. We cannot get a deal from the President, so we progress into the Christmas holidays.

Mr. Speaker, let me remind our colleagues, let me remind everyone here that the House went on record on Monday by a vote of 351 to 40 in favor of a balanced budget within 7 years as scored by the Congressional Budget Office. Yesterday, on Tuesday, the President's budget got zero votes, zero votes; none on the Republican side, none on the Democratic side. The President's budget got zero votes.

Now we are on record for a 7-year balanced budget as scored by the CBO. His budget got zero. That leaves only one alternative. That leaves the alternative of the President coming to the bargaining table with the leaders of the Congress and reaching a deal, reaching a deal that allows us to fund government, to score the budget according to the Congressional Budget Office with a balanced budget for 7 years, and to go home. I hope that happens, Mr. Speaker.

Today, today I might remind our colleagues, today we overrode his veto on the securities litigation bill. This place is not getting better for the President. He should come and cut a deal.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me simply say that nobody is opposed to this bill. This bill will pass, probably 435 to nothing. Our objection is not to this proposal. Our objection is to not going beyond this proposal.

We are here because the appropriations legislation was delayed for 90 days in this House because our friends on the Republican side of the aisle wanted first to adopt their contract. That is their privilege. They are in the majority. They run the House. But as a practical consequence of that, that meant that the appropriations bills were shoved back 90 days in the cycle. That meant that there was no possible way for the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] to produce all of the appropriation bills on time.

The when the bills were brought to the floor, a number of extraneous legislative items were added to the bills, and that slowed up consideration of those bills even more. That meant that by the time of October 1, the beginning of the new fiscal year, a huge number of appropriation bills had not yet become law. That and only that necessitated the passage of a continuing resolution. You do not need a continuing resolution to keep discussions going between the President and the Speaker on a 7-year budget proposal. You need a continuing resolution simply because the 1-year appropriations have not become law.

So tonight we have a proposition before us under which the majority party is saying that they will not allow the remainder of the Government to reopen; since they have been closed down this week, they only want us to allow the Veterans Department to reopen, and then only for certain purposes.

Now, we think it is fine that this bill will say, OK, let us pay veterans' benefits, let us pay veterans' disability benefits, let us pay veterans' pensions, let us pay their education benefits, and also let us pay some contractors with the VA. But we would also ask the following questions:

Why should we not also allow the Veterans Department to process legitimate new claims for veterans' benefits? Some 2,000 veterans will apply each week for benefits to which they are entitled by law. Why should not the Veterans Department be open to provide those services?

Why should the Veterans Department not be open, further, to provide services for home loans? Veterans have earned the right to those home loans. Why should they not be allowed to have those claims processed?

I would also ask, why should not veterans who want to go to Yosemite be able to get in?

Why should not veterans who need education loans be able to have those processed, or to have the Pell grants open for application for everyone?

Why should we only open up the Government for a very narrow band of American citizens?

The taxpayers have paid their hard-earned money so that they might get all of the Government services to which they are entitled, and unless we go beyond this resolution tonight, they will not get those services. That is our objection.

What is happening is very clear. There was an agreement yesterday that the President and the leaders of both parties would try to reopen discussions for a 7-year budget, and at the same time, they would explore ways to open the Government for all citizens. Instead, tonight, the network news tells us because that agreement blew up in the Republican caucus, again we face the prospect of not having any continuation of services from those departments shut down.

Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen in the well here likes to laugh every time somebody else is speaking. I would ask him for the same courtesy I give him every time he speaks.

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. No, I will not, until the gentleman demonstrates some degree of courtesy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The gentleman from Wisconsin has the time, and the Chair would ask Members to extend the same courtesy to speakers when they are in the well, speaking on this bill to all Members.

Let us extend courtesy to one another.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, let me simply say that I think what is at stake here is that the American public is simply being held hostage to the power agenda of the new 73 freshmen who have come into this place on the Republican side of the aisle. They have a perfect right to be here and do anything they think is in the interests of their constituents, but the American citizens will judge the balance and the temperament that they bring to those efforts.

I would simply say that what we really face was summed up by my very good friend, the chairman of the committee on Appropriations [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

When the President signed the Defense appropriation bill, against my advice, because I warned him that he would then lose whatever leverage he had on the remainder of the appropriations bills, the President signed that bill for two reasons: because he wanted a bipartisan consideration of his policy in Bosnia, and because he thought that it would be taken as a sign of goodwill to our Republican friends in the majority on other appropriation items.

Instead, the following day, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said as follows:

> The President is at our mercy. If the government shuts down on December 15 and 300,000 people are again out of work, most of the people going out will be his people. I think he is going to care more than we do.

Now, as everyone knows, I have a great deal of respect and affection for the chairman of this committee. We have been friends for years, and we have had a constructive working relationship for years. But I think that the leverage which other power centers in this body are bringing to bear on the appropriations process is making it very difficult for this House to do its duty to every single citizen in this country.

We have a duty not just to disagree on what we disagree upon; we also have a duty to agree on that which we can agree upon. Right now, we ought to at least be able to agree upon the idea that every citizen of this country has a right to the full range of services that he has paid for. He cannot have access to those services when the Government is shut down.

So what I ask my colleagues to do tonight is not only to support this resolution, but to support our efforts at the end of the debate in our recommittal motion to expand the services which are providing a narrow range for some veterans' programs, expand those to all veterans' programs and, indeed, all of the programs to which our citizens are entitled. if we do not do that, we are not earning our salaries; we are not providing the services which our taxpayers have a right to expect.

Forget the leverage games, forget the zeal, remember your duty; open up the entire Government for the benefit of the American people.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] the distinguished chairman of the Committee on National Security.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 134, a continuing resolution to extend veterans' benefits for the month of January. I commend the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] for his worthy efforts in bringing this important measure to the floor at this time.

In these days of fiscal debate and disagreement, it is crucial that we forget those who rely on us. There are millions of deserving veterans who depend upon their monthly pension or disability checks. It would be an injustice if we, in our current impasse over the budget, allow these veterans' checks, which contain a 2.6-cost-of-living adjustment, not to be processed due to a lack of authorized funds.

Our Nation's veterans answered their country's call, sacrificing their time, quite often their health. They loyally fulfilled their duty to their Nation. In this holiday season, their Nation should fulfill its obligation to them. This resolution will fulfill that obligation, even as we continue our important debate over a balanced budget.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to fully support this worthy measure designed to protect our veterans during this Government shutdown.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, this continuing resolution for one segment of our society, one category of our citizenry is symbolic of the destructive nature of the politics of division that our Republican colleagues are practicing so successfully, but just because it is successful does not make it right.

This CR, for one group of our people over another, begins the Republican crusade to pit our American people against one another. It starts with this CR and it will end with the block grants. You will pit elderly people against poor kids. You are going to pit the veterans against children on AFDC.

Why are you not giving a CR for AFDC recipients? It is because you are making a value judgment here that veterans count more than young kids.

That is what is wrong with your approach, and that is what is wrong with your Contract With America.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. KENNEDY] that AFDC does not require a continuing resolution.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HUTCHINSON], the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Hospitals and Health Care of the Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman who just spoke that there is nothing that we can do for our children that is more important than balancing the budget. If you want to talk about pitting something against the young people of this country, then please talk about the crushing load of debt that we are transferring to them because of our selfishness. Talk about the $187,000 in taxes that they are going to pay during their lifetime to pay for our profligacy and our unwillingness to discipline ourselves.

I say to my colleagues there is nothing more proveteran than balancing the budget. They know what it is to serve this country, and they could use the 2-percent lower interest rates that a balanced budget will mean.

One of the speakers on the other side referred to the veterans of this country, the 2.2 million veterans who are going to be affected by this resolution this evening, as a narrow band of our society. Well, 2.2 million veterans are not a narrow band, and they are the most deserving constituency in this country.

What we are doing is right, and what we are doing is responsible.

Mr. Speaker, 2.2 million veterans receiving compensation for their service-connected disabilities; 308,000 widows, children, and survivors of veterans who have died of service-connected disabilities; 450,000 veterans receiving pensions for their wartime service; and thousands of veterans receiving the Montgomery GI bill payments each month, that is no narrow band of our country.

It is a shame, it is a crying shame that what we are doing this evening is even necessary because this Congress did its business, it did its duty, it passed a VA appropriations bill, one that was good and fair to veterans, increasing veterans' spending over the next 7 years by $40 billion more than the last 7 years at the time that the veteran population is going down.

Let us support our veterans.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER].

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand why we are here just a few days before Christmas, and I hope some of the rhetoric that I am hearing around here is just that.

Let me just point out one thing. Sixty percent of the eligible voters in this country, where you hear about a mandate and a revolution, 60 percent of the eligible voters in this country sent "a pox on both our Houses." That is not a revolutionary number.

Mr. Speaker, let me say one other thing. The gentleman talked about children. I would suspect that some of those 275,000 or 280,000 people that are going to be out of work have children and grandchildren that are going to be impacted because their parents and their grandparents are out of work; and I would suspect that there are some veterans, whom I strongly support and take no back seat to anybody in this building, that have children and grandchildren with jobs that are going to be impacted by this shutdown of government.

I was watching television the other night, and I was watching some of the freshmen on the Republican side, which shows what kind of life I lead. But a young man from Tennessee said, we want to close the Government down. That is what we want to do, close this Government down.

What do my colleagues have against those 270,000 people that have absolutely nothing to do with this budget argument? Absolutely nothing.

Now, what we can do, we can do a resolution that lets these people go back to work, go to their jobs; and we will stay here all weekend, and my colleagues can take turns thrashing the President. Will that not serve the same purpose?

These people have absolutely nothing to do with the budget negotiations. These people have been put out of work for absolutely no reason, and I challenge anybody on this side to give me a reasonable reason why we are putting these people out of work here 3 or 4 days from Christmas when they could be shopping with their children and their grandchildren and experiencing the spirit of Christmas.

So let us get on with the continuing resolution. Let the people go back to work, and then we can continue to work on the budget.

□ 2100

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Let me just say, the gentleman from Wisconsin a few minutes ago, as others have, has made reference to the 73 freshmen we have on our side of the aisle, indicating that they are going off on a tangent and holding us all hostage and stopping progress on the negotiations.

Many of us have been waiting for a long, long time to head this country toward a balanced budget. I have been here 13 years. We have waited and we have waited and we have waited for that additional cadre of people who are willing to fight with us to get to a balanced budget.

We have heard all the rhetoric, all the arguments for years from the Democrat side of the aisle saying, "We're going to do it, we're going to do it, we're going to do it" but we never do it. The deficit continues to rise and rise and rise and we now have a $5 trillion national debt.

So I would just like to say to my colleague from Wisconsin, thank God for the 73 new Republican freshmen because they speak for what we have been speaking for the past 13 years. They do not speak by themselves. They speak for all of us. We are all together on this and we are going to get the job done.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker in the well said that the most important thing we can do for our children is to give them this balanced budget.

It is a strange notion of Christmas, as you gather your children around, and you say you gave them a balanced budget. But when your children ask you what is the price to other children, you tell them the children in foster care will not be able to receive placement, children who are abused are likely not to receive placement in a safe home away from the abuse, children that need health care because their parents lost their jobs will find that not there because of your cuts in Medicaid.

They always say the children are not as cruel as adults, but they will find out how cruel it was. When you tell them the price for the other children in this Nation, they are going to say, "Shame on you, Daddy. Shame on you, that you did that to the children of this Nation." Because children do not desire to see their colleagues hurt, to see their colleagues suffer that kind of pain, but that is what your budget does and that is why it should not be accepted.

I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], who attempted to correct me, is not quite correct in his trying to correct me.

If we do not complete the work on the Labor-HHS bill, States will not get the money that they need to provide for these dependent children, and that was the point I was trying to make. In fact, the point seems to have been lost here that we are trying to make a value judgment in passing a CR for one group of Americans and not another, because we all perceive this group to have political legitimacy but the children do not. That is the point I was trying to make.

Mr. MILLER of California. The gentleman is exactly right.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, yielding myself 15 seconds, I am concerned for all of the poor people that the gentleman from California referred to. But the point is that if he would get on the phone and talk to his colleagues on the other side of the building, so they might release their filibuster and that Labor-Health and Human Services bill that has been filibustered for the last 6 months by the Democrats in the Senate might go forward.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker I would really like to talk about what the resolution does. I rise in support of the continuing resolution that will assure that 3 million veterans will get their benefit checks on time. Two million of the 3 million veterans are service-connected either because of wounds or because of wounds or because they were hurt in the service. Also, the service-connected will get a 2.6-percent cost of living increase in their checks.

Mr. Speaker, I have felt very strongly about this, that the Federal Government has a stronger responsibility to the persons who marched off to war and came home, or to the widows and orphans of those who did not come home. So let us vote for this veterans' resolution.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished chairman of the committee has made the point on a number of occasions that the Labor-Health bill is held up because of a filibuster. But he never says why, the reason being, because the Republicans have put a provision on the Labor-Health bill that will make it easy to fire people, easy to get rid of people, easy to get them out of jobs. Is it not ironic that the CR that you will not allow us to pass does exactly the same thing, keeping people out of jobs? That is why the Labor-Health bill has not passed.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BILIRAKIS], a distinguished member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation to ensure that veterans' programs will continue to be funded in the wake of the President's recent veto. Because President Clinton vetoed H.R. 2099, the 1996 VA-HUD appropriations bill, as has been said so many times here tonight, veterans' benefit checks will not be paid on time next month unless a short-term spending measure is passed by 8 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The President should have signed H.R. 2099 and avoided putting these benefits and services in jeopardy. However, since he did not, we in Congress must act to ensure this funding and protect the Nation's veterans.

The question has been asked a few times tonight: Why do this special thing for the veteran? I will tell why. Because if history has taught us anything, it is that the American serviceman has borne any hardship, has overcome any obstacle and has conquered any foe in the defense of liberty, justice, and freedom.

I think that he and she, more than anyone, can understand our battle to balance the budget for the sake of our children and our grandchildren. We must maintain our commitment to them, and Congress is here tonight because we feel strongly that veterans' benefits must not get lost in the battle to balance the Nation's budget.

America can never really fully repay our veterans and we will never be able to express our feelings to our fallen soldiers, but we can act to ensure that veterans will receive the benefit checks that they have earned. Our Nation's veterans deserve nothing less. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and ensure its passage.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FATTAH].

Mr. FATTAH. Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. KENNEDY]. Then I would like to get to this point at hand.

There is no veteran in this country who has exhibited bravery and courage on behalf of our Nation who did that to protect or to defend themselves. They did that to protect and defend this country and the people who live here, the women and children and senior citizens of our land who are being victimized by this budget impasse and by this Government shutdown.

So to come to the floor and say we want to honor the veterans by allowing their checks to go out, we should honor their bravery and their courage by putting this Nation's budget back in order and allowing the Government to operate so that the children of these veterans, the parents and grandparents of these veterans, so that the communities that these veterans live in, can be the kind of Nation that may of them fought and gave so much for.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BUYER], the chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, Training, Employment and Housing of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the comments of my good friend, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY], who said we really should be talking about what is before us. That is, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, Training, Employment and Housing of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I take my duty and responsibilities very seriously to the 26 million veterans.

The bill which the President vetoed was very disappointing because we had over a $400 million increase in VA medical care. The research budget totaled $257 million. Veterans' benefits programs funding will increase from $36.9 billion in fiscal year 1996 to $41.8 billion in fiscal year 2002. So during the next 7 years, more than $275 billion will be spent on veterans' programs, $40 billion more than the previous 7 years. I think that is very important.

The budget which is being attacked here all of a sudden, it fully funds the important veterans' compensation, pension programs, the GI bill, vocational rehabilitation insurance, the home loan program, and a COLA increase of 2.6 percent.

The bill that is before us will ensure the on-time payment of benefits for compensation, pension, DIC, and the GI bill. It will also ensure that contractors who supply the services directly related to patient health and safety will be paid, and it will also ensure that such services as ambulance service and contract physician coverage for emergency care will continue.

I also would like to share with my colleagues, as I witnessed the debate on the rule, I would almost caution my colleagues, my Republican colleagues and my Democratic colleagues, that I was disappointed in some of the lack of civility shown here in the House.

No one in this Chamber by political party has a cornerstone on the concerns of veterans. Many of us in this body, when we wore the uniform, no one ever asked us were we a Republican or were we a Democrat. This is why we operate in the Committee on Veterans' Affairs in a tremendous bipartisan spirit, not only in the authorizing committee but in the appropriating committee.

Here is what is going to happen here tonight. We are going to continue to play a little politics, but America will receive a message here tonight. This body will overwhelmingly support this because we believe in bipartisanship for veterans.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON].

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, of course I intend to support this bill. I was sitting in the back of the Chamber listening to the rhetoric, and some of it rather fiery and some of it rather tough, and here in this season, the season supposed to be that of good will and peace, and I think that we lack that element here in this whole debate, that of good will.

I hope that in the days ahead, not just for this body, a very special revered body in this country, but for the people back home, that we reexamine and have good will and work toether and get the people's work done.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of good will, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. EVERETT], chairman of the Subcommittee on Compensation, Pension, Insurance and Memorial Affairs of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. EVERETT Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, our Nation's veterans deserve better treatment than they have received from this President. President Clinton alone bears responsibility for the Government shutdown, since he vetoed the Veterans Administration appropriations bill earlier this week. This is a good bill. It added $400 million above last year's VA health care budget and increased overall VA spending while most departments of government face cuts.

Mr. Clinton had a choice to put veterans first. Instead, he put treehuggers first. In his statement today, President Clinton spoke of protecting Medicare. He is going to leave saving Medicare to Republicans. Medicaid, education, and the environment. True to his principles, Mr. Clinton left out out Nation's veterans. He has lavished funding on his priorities, the paid volunteer AmeriCorps boondoggle, a Bosnian occupation, jet-setting Cabinet members, and a host of failed liberal social programs.

But, sadly, the President has chosen to play politics with our Nation's veterans and to jeopardize the balanced budget which benefits our Nation and all Americans. Our bill corrects this. Rather than shortcutting our Nation's veterans as the President was willing to accept, this bill ensures that payment to some 3 million veterans and their dependents will continue to be made on schedule.

Despite the utter lack of this President's leadership, Congress will look out for those who have worn our Nation's uniform. Though this President has avoided the tough choices required in restoring fiscal sanity needed to support our veterans, we will ensure their protection. I urge adoption of this legislation.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLINK].

Mr. KLINK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

I was in the district of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MASCARA], my colleague, a couple of months ago. We were traveling with some hospital administrators in our area who were telling senior citizens the impact in a nonpartisan way. Many of them were Republicans. They were telling the senior citizens about the impact of the Republican cuts in Medicare and Medicaid on their hospitals. They were telling them in their own words. We did not coach them.

At the end of it this exsteelworker looked up at me with a big broad smile that turned into a very sad face, and he actually started to cry. And I said, What is the matter? He said, You know, I have never asked this country for much of anything. I laid in the snow and I laid in the mud and the rain for 5 years in Europe. I was not wounded. I was one of the the fortunate ones. I never asked this country for anything except keep its promise to me. Give me Medicare and Medicaid, if I need it. Do not make my children have to give up educating my grandchildren because they have to pick up the bill because we no longer prohibit that sort of thing to occur.

He was very sad. So I am glad that we are taking care of the veterans with this rifle shot CR. But there are so many things that we are doing that is hurting those same veterans. We are balancing the budget on their backs and they are being asked to fight again.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. COOLEY], a member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in favor of House Joint Resolution 134—a bill to ensure that our Nation's veterans receive their compensation checks during this shutdown.

I am firmly committed to balancing our Nation's budget, but our veterans are innocent victims of this shutdown.

Those who have risked their lives and liberty in service of this Nation—those who depend on the monthly benefits that our Federal Government has contracted to give them—should not be cut off at any time.

For all of us, this should be an easy vote. It would be immoral to turn our backs on our veterans.

That said—I must say one thing. Let there be no mistake about it.

This budget fight might be ugly—but the Republicans in Congress are waging this fight to preserve the strength and integrity of this Nation.

As a veteran myself, I cannot sit back and watch our Nation become weaker—racking up trillions of dollars in debt.

I hope and believe that other veterans throughout this great Nation agree with me.

Congress must—for once—exercise some fiscal discipline.

Meanwhile, we will provide for those who have served this Nation.

I urge a "yes" vote on the bill.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. WATERS].

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, as a ranking member of the Subcommittee on Education, Training, Employment, and Housing of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am ashamed to hear the staging and profiling by too many of my Republican friends on the other side of the aisle proclaiming their love for our veterans.

Where were they when the President needed them for resources for hospitals and medical care? He had to veto the VA-HUD bill and in his message he told them why he was doing it. They refused to support him for hospital resources for veterans.

Besides that, where were they when the Republican-appointed Clerk just fired a veteran of 23 years who helped to install the electronic voting system for this House? A veteran who served in Vietnam, who was fired without cause, they just kicked him out before Christmas without cause. They just let go a veteran who served in Vietnam and told him they did not care about him or his family.

With friends like you, the veterans do not need any enemies.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, wondering whether the preceding speaker voted for the defense appropriations bill, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYWORTH], a distinguished member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to endorse fully the remarks made in a bipartisan fashion by the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Indiana. I, too, yearn for a return to civility, which is why I listened with great interest when my friend, the ranking member on the Committee on Appropriations, chose to attack me personally.

Mr. Speaker, I think it must be forgiven when a web of fiction is so intricately weaved and pronounced here on the floor of this House that quite often it is my natural reaction to chuckle. If a smile or a chuckle at the absurdity is inappropriate, well, then I suppose I am guilty of having a sense of humor, but a sense of humor born of the fact that we have to laugh to keep from crying. Because once again, Members of the minority get up with a straight face and they ignore reality.

The President of the United States vetoed veterans appropriations that were genuine increases in spending, $400 million over last year, fact. And the fact is that this new majority, working in concert with responsible Members of the minority, will pass this overwhelmingly. I dare say that was the one remark given by the ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations that I can agree with. This legislation will pass overwhelmingly because it is the right thing to do.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY], former chairman of this committee, who would like to speak to the issue of veterans benefits.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I would simply comment on the comments of the previous speaker who addressed himself to something I said on the floor.

I would simply note, I have observed him on three occasions this week sitting in the front row of the Chamber and loudly laughing at whoever it was who was speaking at the moment, disrupting their ability to speak. I think the House deserves better conduct than that from any Member.

I would also make the point, if we want to talk about fiction, I would make the point that it was solid fact when we stated earlier in the day, and when I stated in that same statement, that the bill for veterans funding, for veterans health care was $213 million below the amount that the bill was when it left the House.

That conference report contained $1½ billion more in total funding, and yet they managed to cut the veterans funding by $213 million.

The gentleman may feel that that is an adequate level of funding. That is his prerogative. I happen to honestly disagree. It would be nice if we could honestly disagree without constantly demonstrating physical disrespect for each other.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYWORTH].

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, good people can disagree. Good people can disagree about a great many subjects. But when repeated fiction is stated on the floor of this House, it is sad.

Once again, the ranking member has chosen to personally attack this Member of the Congress. I just simply want to say that it is shameful that these people would rather engage in shenanigans than to confront the problems we have today.

Once again, I reach out my hand to the minority side and indeed to the gentleman at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. Let us reason together and solve America's problems.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA], a senior member of the Committee on Appropriations, former chairman of the Subcommittee on National Security.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, one of the things I wanted to point out to the Members that I think is so important in the recommittal motion that we had, and this may not be the right time and I know the Members that voted for the authorization feel that they have taken care of the two problems that we have in this recommittal motion, but in this recommittal motion we have language which will take care of the disparity in the COLA between the military retiree and the civilian retiree. We think that is important. We also have in this legislation to take care of the increase in pay for the military.

Now, I know the President is going to veto the bill. I know it passed by a slight majority in the Senate. As I understand it, the majority leader on the other side may add this to their bill at some point, but I just want the Members to realize, this is something that has to be done by the first of the year. If we do not take care of it, if we do not put this type of language in one of our appropriations bills, if the authorization is vetoed, then it means that the members of the armed services would not get their first month's increase or whatever increase it was or the COLA disparity would continue.

For 3 years the Subcommittee on National Security has taken care of the COLA disparity. We put the money in, even though it was forced on the authorization. So I would hope as the Members vote they think about this one particular provision in this recommittal. It is a very simple provision that takes care of those two things.

As I say, since the authorization has not been vetoed at this point, my colleagues may feel that this is not the time to do it. but at some point we have to do this. I would hope that the majority would recognize this so we could get it done before the first of the year.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute and 30 seconds to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, there is only one person who stands between a balanced budget in this town and that is the President of the United States because he vetoed the balanced budget. There is only one person that stands between those employees of the Commerce and Justice Department being at work, and that is the gentleman who vetoed that bill, the appropriations that would have paid their wages. That is the President of the United States.

There is only one person that stands between the national parks being open and the people who work for the Department of Interior, and that is the gentleman who vetoed that appropriation bill, the President of the United States. There is only one person who stands between those who work for VA and HUD and besides there would have been a 2.4-percent increase for our military had this bill been approved, and that is the President of the United States, the man who vetoed the appropriation bill.

Mr. Speaker, I was reading the other day in Reader's Digest a quote that I think fits this area, this time very well. It was by the late Harry Truman. He said, it is not the hand that signs the laws that holds the destiny of America; it is the hand that cast the ballot.

I think that we could say the same here. It is not the hand that vetoes the laws that holds the destiny of America; it is the hand that casts the ballot.

I urge support of this continuing resolution to fund the benefits of our veterans.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill.

The untold story of the Gingrich budget process is that this Congress simply did not get its work done on time. Thirteen appropriations bills were supposed to be completed by October 1. Not one of them was signed by the President into law by that deadline.

This Congress has been badly run, poorly administered, extreme and radical. That is why we now have this absurd Government shutdown.

The other reason American taxpayers have had to bear this ridiculous Gingrich Government shutdown is that the Speaker personally threatened over and over and over to shut down the Government so he could have his way to have a massive shift of money and resources from the poor and from the middle class to give to the rich; Medicare cuts so we could have tax breaks for the rich; student loan cuts so we could have tax breaks for the largest corporations in this country; education and environmental cuts so we could have tax breaks for billionaires who renounce their citizenship.

It is wrong, and the Gingrich Republicans know it is wrong.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. MICA].

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I get confused. Is this the same President that went on TV tonight and said, after vetoing the VA appropriations bill, we are going to delay veterans benefits?

Is this the same President that I recall that cooked with the other side a bill to delay military COLA's for months and months and would permanently have to reinstate it? Is this the same President that proposes better benefits for a volunteer program, a new volunteer program, than he does for our veterans? Is this the same President—I keep getting confused—who proposes better benefits for welfare recipients than our veterans? My goodness, am I confused. Is this the same President who offers better and cooked with the other side better benefits for illegal aliens who wash up on the shore and have never served the country? Is this the same President who just a few weeks ago threatened to veto the appropriations bill until he was going to send our troops into Bosnia? I get confused. Is this the same President that my colleagues have said he, as a candidate, he was going to have a plan, and he would get elected, and he would have a plan to balance the budget in 5 years? I get confused. Is this the same President who called the 73 freshmen extremists, the businessmen and women, people who have worked for a honest living and come to this place to straighten up its messed-up finances?

Now who do my colleagues believe? I am telling my colleagues that there are over 230 of us who are prepared to stay here until Washington, or whatever, freezes over, until we get a balanced budget and until we treat our veterans right.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Texas [Ms. JACKSON-LEE].

Ms. JACKSON-LEE. Needless to say by the previous speaker's antics, Mr. Speaker, my Republican colleagues are mired in confusion for they believe that they have the moral high ground, and yet I find them someplace that we would not want to proceed.

The American people know where the trouble is. They realize that the President of the United States stands with opportunity. They also realize that there was a Congress here some years ago, a Democratic Congress with two Republican Presidents, and they recognize that there was great dispute on the budget, and under Reagan there was no historic shutdown, under Bush there was no long, extended shutdown.

So, Mr. Speaker, we realize that politics of Republicans is to bring the country to its knees. The people realize that the Democrats offered to increase the pay of those in Bosnia; the Republicans rejected it. They realize that we can have a clean continuing resolution, and the Republicans rejected it so that we cannot keep this Government open. They realize that disabled children will not have their benefits because of the Republicans.

This is not about the President of the United States. This is about no moral leadership with the Republicans.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOKE].

Mr. HOKE. Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to hear earlier the question from the other side, of the wonderment from the other side, that we would actually prioritize a particular rifle-shot continuing resolution for veterans, that we should not somehow be putting them at the top priority, and I just want to remind my friends on both sides of the aisle that, if there is one group that we ought to, for heaven's sakes, prioritize as being No. 1, that we should take care of without any question before, yes clearly before we take care of other groups in our society, those are veterans.

Think about the veterans who have spilled blood and are now on a pension, and think about that veteran's widow, that veteran's children. Why on Earth would it come as a surprise, why would it even be an issue? Where would the question ever come from?

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOKE. I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the gentleman from Cleveland, but I would like to ask him the question, "If you truly want to serve the veterans of this country, would you vote with me to pass the VA-HUD-EPA bill with the amendments that we have been trying to offer in the committee?"

Mr. HOKE. Reclaiming my time, I did vote for the VA-HUD appropriations bill that was passed in this House that was vetoed by the President of the United States 2 days ago. I vote for it proudly. We would not be here tonight, we would not be doing this tonight, had the President not vetoed that bill.

Ms. KAPTUR. Would the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOKE. No. I will not yield, but I will yield at the end if I have time.

Clearly what disturbs me is that there would be a question as to why we would be here this evening to prioritize the needs of the Nation's veterans. It seems to me absolutely and utterly appropriate that we would do that, and it is only a very mean-spirited, very extreme liberal agenda that would not put that first.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely nothing wrong with putting veterans at the head of a line. We ought to put all of the veterans at the head of the line. What is wrong with making available Government services so that new veterans who are entitled to housing benefits, who are entitled to disability benefits, who are entitled to pensions; why do we not handle this resolution tonight so they can also get the services they need in order to get the aid that they have a right to expect from their Government? Why are our colleagues shutting the Government down to them and only opening it to people who already have those benefits?

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, listening to this debate tonight reminded me of when I was a small child. In the Catholic school I attended there was a framed picture on the wall, and it said, "Suffer little children and come unto me." I could not understand it. I asked by parents and teacher who would want children to suffer, and then it was explained to me that the third or fourth meaning of suffer was permit, allow, children to come unto me.

Listening to our colleagues exclude children from this continuing resolution goes to the first meaning of suffer little children, to hear our colleagues come to the well and say that they have to have it this way, only the veterans.

By the way, I agree that the question here tonight is not why should we be doing this for the veterans. Of course we should. The question really is why should we not be doing it for children and others as well? But to hear our colleagues come to the well and say they are doing this so their children do not have to pay interest on the national debt 20 years from now, some children do not have anything to eat 20 minutes from now.

The message is very clear, Republican majority: Suffer, little children.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODLATTE].

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, for yielding me the time, and I rise in strong support of this resolution to get payment to our Nation's veterans. They have sacrificed for our country, they have laid their lives on the line, and this is a very important continuing resolution, and those on the other side of the aisle who pointed out that there are a number of other things that need to be resolved, they are absolutely right as well. As a matter of fact, there are a number of things that should be taken care of, and we pointed out on our side that many of them would have been taken care of if the President had signed into law the veterans appropriations, the Department of Housing and Urban Development appropriations, the Commerce Department appropriations, and State Department appropriations, the Justice Department appropriations, the Interior Department appropriations. But this week he vetoed every single one of those appropriation measures and has effectively closed down all of those agencies except for essential personnel.

Now the President of the United States has a constitutional right to veto every single one of those pieces of legislation, but he also has a moral obligation and an obligation based on the law he signed over 30 days ago to balance the budget in 7 years using real numbers, to come forward with his itemized response to everything he does not like in each one of those appropriations bills, in each one of the entitlement measures we have in the country, so that we can sit down with him and negotiate. It is time to stop name calling, it is time to get down and negotiate, but we have got to have a reasonable, responsible approach to do that, and both parties laying their cards on the table, and everybody sitting down and getting serious about this is exactly what is needed, and I call upon everybody, including the President of the United States, to stop the press conferences and start negotiating.

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas, Mr. GENE GREEN.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to follow the last speaker, because I hope we would put our cards on the table, and if the other side would do it and say, OK, let us take that tax cut off the table, $245 billion, $200 billion, we would not have to be worried about keeping the checks going to our veterans or veterans' widows.

I had the opportunity tonight to talk to a widow of a veteran. She said she could not pay for her food, she could not pay for her utilities unless her check is there, and I am glad we are at least dealing with that.

The reason we are here though is because this bill, the VA-HUD bill, was rejected by this Congress I do not know how many times because of the 20-percent cut in HUD, cuts in veterans' programs, cuts in lots of programs, and that is why we are here tonight on a stopgap measure.

I hope we pass this, but let us remember the reason we are here is because the majority could not pass these bills by October 1, not because the President vetoed it, because they could not pass them, and now they are having to take care of it on this. I would hope we would take care of our veterans, but I hope we would also be able to take care of those who need housing.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON], a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] for yielding this time to me.

As my colleagues know, I hear a lot of partisan finger pointing tonight, but this is not about Democrats, it is not about Republicans. It is about veterans. Do my colleagues want to help those who have helped us? Do my colleagues want to honor what they have done for us in the past?

Samuel Johnson said we should always remember our forefathers and our future generations, but, more importantly, we should remember the sacrifices of the former on behalf of the latter, and that is what we are doing tonight. We are remembering our veterans.

Now I would say to the gentlewoman from San Francisco, CA [Ms. PELOSI] we are not forgetting our children, we are certainly not forgetting the children. Our colleagues are going to give them a $5 trillion debt when they are through with their left-wing spending policies. If a child is born today, he or she owes $187,000 as his or her part of interest on the national debt over a 75-year working period of time. That is $187,000 above and beyond local, State, and Federal taxes. I say to my colleague, "Boy, you have not forgotten the children, I must say, and I tell you what. If that's your idea of compassion, that's your idea of caring, if that's your idea of a great Christmas present, fast forward me and my kids to groundhog day."

Mr. FAZIO of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. SLAUGHTER].

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in expressing my concern and dismay that we must be here tonight to debate this mini CR. As we all know, this work should have been completed months ago.

As we work tonight to ensure that our veterans receive the benefit checks they so deserve, I cannot help thinking about the over 250,000 federal employees who are sitting in their homes, wondering and worrying about their fate and wondering if we care.

Christmas is 5 days away. Yet the radical new Majority refuses to find a way to solve this budget impasse, and insists on holding hardworking federal workers—and their families—hostage to their misguided and unfair budget priorities.

Let us stop the nonsense. Let us open the entire government. And let us finish our work so Federal employees can do their work.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I only have one more speaker, so I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN].

□ 2145

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the ranking Democrat on the Committee on Appropriations for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, let me explain why we have problems with this bill. It is certainly not that this bill provides benefits for veterans. The problem with this bill is that it is shortsighted and insufficient. If we do not pass a continuing resolution by December 22, this Friday, 13 million welfare checks cannot be processed by the Department of Health and Human Services. Are we going to pass a specific continuing resolution for welfare checks? I think not. But they cannot be processed if we do not have a CR by December 22. If we do not have a continuing resolution by next Wednesday, $11 million in checks cannot be sent to the States by the Medicaid program. The States cannot function without that $11 billion in Medicaid programs.

Between votes I checked my message machine. I just want to share with you a little message that was on it. It said: "Please tell Congressman MORAN that we veterans have been hungry before, we veterans have been cold before, but we veterans have never put our interests ahead of the country's interests before." He said: "As far as I am concerned, I do not want my benefit check until women and children get their checks first."

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me take this time to point out that the recommit motion that I will offer would simply do everything that the motion before us purports to do. Our motion would open up the government for all of the veterans services described in the motion before us. We would add to that all other services to be provided, that could be provided by the Veterans Department, so the Veterans Department is open for all programs, for servicing all programs. We would expand that to provide, in fact, a clean CR through January 26 for all other functions of government, and we would at the same time authorize the 2.4 percent military pay raise for our servicemen and eliminate the 6-month disparity between COLA payment dates for military and civilian retirees, so we can assure that our military personnel will in fact be treated fairly, and will in fact receive their full COLA.

As we know, Mr. Speaker, the authorization bill is expected to be vetoed. Without this language, we can, therefore, not guarantee our troops going to Bosnia that they will have the full COLA. We think we ought to do that and, most fundamentally, we think we ought to open all of the services of government because the taxpayers have paid for those services and they are entitled to receive them.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard a number of arguments on this joint resolution. I am not sure they were in opposition to it, because it appears that everybody is going to vote for this bill. Some of the arguments were, "We are not doing enough." Well, if the President had not vetoed the last three appropriations bills we sent him, we would be doing a heck of a lot more than we have done so far. The fact is, as was said in the well, the President has vetoed the Justice Department appropriation, the Commerce Department appropriation, the State Department appropriation, the Interior Department appropriation, the VA-HUD appropriation, the Judiciary appropriation, and the NASA appropriation. He has vetoed all of those in the last week. All the people that work for those agencies could have gone back to work and been paid. All of the benefits that accrue under those bills could have gone into effect if the President simply signed these bills. And for all of those people who say they are concerned about children, for crying out loud, do not direct your concern at us. Tell those people, your counterparts in the other body that are filibustering the Labor-Health and Human Services bill in the Senate. It has been there for 5 months. It is about time to move that bill.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it would be real nice if they would all of a sudden lift that filibuster, and we could dispose of it through a conference report, send it to the President, and maybe he might sign that bill and maybe he might not. Listening to his messages that we hear on television day after day about the Republicans being extremists, I get a little confused, as the gentleman from Florida earlier pointed out. Who is on first base here?

It is about time he starts getting the message. The Republican message is we want a balanced budget in 7 years, 2002. That is the only message. The rest of it is just quibbling about details. But the President has said on various times, "I am for a 5-year balanced budget, I am for a 10-year balanced budget, I am for a 9-year balanced budget, I am for an 8-year balanced budget, and yes, I am even for a 7-year balanced budget, but not that 7-year balanced budget." He does not have any details. He has come to us, he has given us, one after another, budgets that were imbalanced year after year after year, and he has not come to the table and bargained in good faith to give us what we are asking for, a 7-year balanced budget.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill. It may not cover everything we want, but it is a start. It gives the veterans the benefit payments that they need, and hopefully, if the President comes to the table, we can take care of the rest of the unfunded activities as well.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this continuing resolution to make sure that veterans receive their checks on time at the end of this month. There is no doubt that this Congress is concerned about our veterans. It is clear that this continuing resolution is important and I will vote for it.

However, I must say that there is no reason why we can't pass a continuing resolution to keep the rest of the Government operating.

More than a quarter of a million Federal workers who have been furloughed are important, too. They have families. They have children. Federal workers matter.

Any yet the Republicans in this Congress refuse to pass a continuing resolution to keep our Government open because they want to force the President to accept their extreme agenda.

Mr. Speaker, we were sent to Congress to do the work of the people. We know what we need to do—pass a responsible budget that protects seniors, protects children, protects veterans, and sends our Federal employees back to work.

Mr. Speaker, let's stop the partisan fighting. Let's get our work done and let's give the American people the best Christmas presents they could ask for—a holiday they can spend with their families and a Government that can work together to solve this budget crisis.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 134, legislation to ensure that veterans, dependents, and survivors will continue to receive their well-earned benefits during this Government shutdown.

I would like to recognize the dedicated efforts of TIM HUTCHINSON, who has been a tireless advocate for veterans and has introduced legislation to ensure that veterans receive the compensation they deserve even when the Government is closed. I would also like to thank Chairman STUMP and ranking member MONTGOMERY for their tireless work on behalf of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation should never have been necessary. This week, the President had an opportunity to sign the VA-HUD appropriations bill, which would have secured the funding for veterans benefits. Instead, he vetoed it. President Clinton also has the unilateral authority to order the delivery of veterans' benefits during a Government shutdown. But he has not used it. Because of the administration's insistence on playing partisan politics with veterans, the livelihood of 3.3 million veterans, dependents, and survivors is in jeopardy.

No one in this country has a greater claim to this Nation's Treasury than veterans who have been disabled as a result of service in the Armed Forces and the survivors of those who made the ultimate sacrifice and gave their lives in the defense of our Nation. Keeping faith with these heroes, their widows and their orpahns—whatever our Nation's fiscal circumstance—is as important as anything we do in Congress.

We must do what we can to guarantee that these brave men and women, who answered the call to duty and were willing to put their lives on the line in defense of their country, will receive what they deserve. This bill does that.

Our veterans deserve better than to be sacrificed at the altar of partisan politics. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this bill, which will put veterans ahead of politics.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. Speaker, tonight we consider a bill that is vital to protect our veterans during this Christmas season. As you know, the current Government shutdown means that veterans' checks will be delayed if we do not pass a "rifle-shot" continuing resolution to allow the checks to be sent. I applaud the efforts of my fellow Arkansan, Mr. HUTCHINSON, chairman of the Subcommittee on Hospitals and Health Care, for his effort to get this bill to the floor so that we can protect the benefits of those who have served our country.

I strongly feel that each of us is forever in debt to our fellow Americans who risked their lives to protect our freedoms. I believe that after a person has served in the military, like my father did and his father before him, we should make every effort as a country to care for them, especially if they were injured in the line of duty. I want to ensure that veterans benefits receive fair treatment during the current budget negotiations. The current budget debate should not cloud our country's responsibilities and obligations to her veterans and this bill safeguards that obligation.

As important as this bill is, it should not be necessary. There is no excuse for holding any of our citizens hostage to the partisan bickering which has led to the current government shutdown. Although this bill will protect our veterans throughout the rest of the budget debate, we still have millions of other citizens who are not protected from the ill effects of this ideological impasse. For example, many hunters in Arkansas have been turned away from our wildlife refuges at the height of hunting season, even though they played by the rules and purchased their permits.

Since the principal parties have agreed to balance the budget in 7 years, let's end this partisan bickering and accomplish our stated goal. No group, especially our veterans who selflessly served to protect our liberty and freedom, should be pawns in our political games. I strongly support this legislation because it protects our veterans from being used again. However, we should do the same for our hunters and all Americans. The coalition budget proves that a reasonable compromise is possible. Let's stop this demagoguery and get down to the heavy lifting we were sent here to do.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I urge passage of the bill, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Pursuant to House Resolution 317, the previous question is ordered on the joint resolution.

The question is on engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, at the direction of the minority leader, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the joint resolution?

Mr. OBEY. At this point, in its present form, Mr. Speaker, I certainly am.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. OBEY moves to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report back forthwith with an amendment as follows:

Strike all after the resolving clause and insert:

SEC. 101. ENSURED PAYMENT DURING FISCAL YEAR 1996 OF VETERANS' BENEFITS IN EVENT OF LACK OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) PAYMENTS REQUIRED.—In any case during fiscal year 1996 in which appropriations are not otherwise available for programs, projects, and activities of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall nevertheless ensure that—

(1) payments of existing veterans benefits are made in accordance with regular procedures and schedules and in accordance with eligibility requirements for such benefits; and

(2) payments to contractors of the Veterans Health Administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs are made when due in the case of services provided that directly relate to patient health and safety.

(b) FUNDING.—There is hereby appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the payments pursuant to subsection (a), including such amounts as may be necessary for the costs of administration of such payments.

(c) CHARGING OF ACCOUNTS WHEN APPROPRIATIONS MADE.—In any case in which the Secretary uses the authority of subsection (a) to make payments, applicable accounts shall be charged for amounts so paid, and for the costs of administration of such payments, when regular appropriations become available for those purposes.

(d) EXISTING BENEFITS SPECIFIED.—For purposes of this section, existing veterans benefits are benefits under laws administered by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs that have been adjudicated and authorized for payment as of—

(1) December 15, 1995; or

(2) if appropriations for such benefits are available (other than pursuant to subsection (b)) after December 15, 1995, the last day on which appropriations for payment of such benefits are available (other than pursuant to subsection (b)).

SEC. 102. FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 106(c) of Public Law 104-56 is amended by striking "December 15, 1995" and inserting "January 26, 1996".

SEC. 103. MILITARY PAY RAISE FOR FISCAL YEAR 1996.

(a) WAIVER OF SECTION 1009 ADJUSTMENT.—Any adjustment required by section 1009 of title 37, United States Code, in elements of compensation of members of the uniformed services to become effective during fiscal year 1996 shall not be made.

(b) INCREASE IN BASIC PAY AND BAS.—Effective on January 1, 1996, the rates of basic pay and basic allowance for subsistence of members of the uniformed services are increased by 2.4 percent.

(c) INCREASE IN BAQ.—Effective on January 1, 1996, the rates of basic allowance for quarters of members of the uniformed services are increased by 5.2 percent.

SEC. 104 ELIMINATION OF DISPARITY BETWEEN EFFECTIVE DATES FOR MILITARY AND CIVILIAN RETIREE COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1996.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The fiscal year 1996 increase in military retired pay shall (notwithstanding subparagraph (B) of section 1401a(b)(2) of title 10, United States Code) first be payable as part of such retired pay for the month of March 1996.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of subsection (a):

(1) The term "fiscal year 1996 increased in military retired pay" means the increase in retired pay that, pursuant to paragraph (1) of section 1401a(b) of title 10, United States Code, becomes effective on December 1, 1995.

(2) The Term "retired pay" includes retainer pay.

(c) FINANCING.—The Secretary of Defense shall transfer, from any other funds made available to the Department of Defense, such sums as may be necessary for payment to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund solely for the purpose of offsetting the estimated increase in outlays to be made from such Fund in fiscal year 1996 by reason of the provisions of subsection (a). Nothwithstanding any other provision of law, the transfer authority made available to the Secretary in Public Law 104-61 or any other law shall be increased by the amounts required to carry out the provisions of this section.

Mr. OBEY (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to explain the amendment.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman would explain which motion to recommit he is talking about.

Mr. OBEY. No. 1.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the gentleman's motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A point of order is reserved on the motion to recommit.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I think the purpose of this motion is quite clear. As I said earlier, this motion would incorporate the provisions of the Veterans Department which are included in the original legislation before us. We would open up the Government for those services, but we would add to that the following: We would add all remaining services to be provided by the Veterans Department.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I must insist on my point of order.

Mr. OBEY. We would also add all other remaining functions of the Government which have been closed down up until now. We would also, as I said, guarantee that the military receive their 2.5-percent pay raise, and correct the differential that now exists between civilian pay and military pay, so that the military pay would be provided in the same terms and conditions as civilian pay.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge the adoption of the motion to recommit.

POINT OF ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] insist on his point of order?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the motion to recommit with instructions because it is not germane to the underlying resolution, and as such in violation of clause 7 of rule XVI.

Mr. Speaker, I quote from the Precedents of the House:

"It is not in order to do indirectly by a motion to commit with instructions what may not be done directly by way of amendment."

Mr. Speaker, a specific proposition cannot be amended by another proposition broader in scope. The motion to recommit deals with funding and authorizing activities outside the Department of Veterans Affairs, and therefore is not germane to the underlying resolution which deals only with funding for selected activities in this department.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's motion to instruct is not germane, Mr. Speaker, and I ask for a ruling from the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. OBEY, wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OBEY. Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker, I would simply say the purpose of the resolution before us this evening is to provide additional services to taxpayers. The purpose of my motion is to provide additional services to taxpayers. It simply expands the number of services available. It is the same taxpayers we are talking about, and I think they are entitled to a full range of services. I would therefore urge the Chair support the germaneness of the proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The pending joint resolution continues the availability of appropriations for a specified fiscal period to fund certain activities of the Department of Veterans' Affairs.

The amendment proposed in the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin seeks to continue the availability of appropriations for a similar fiscal period to fund the activities of other departments and agencies for which regular appropriations for fiscal year 1996 have not yet been enacted.

One of the important lines of precedent under clause 7 of rule 16—the germaneness rule—holds that a proposition addressing a specific subject may not be amended by a proposition more general in nature.

For example, the Chair held on September 27, 1967, that an amendment applicable to all departments and agencies was not germane to a bill limited in its applicability to certain departments and agencies of Government. That precedent is annotated in section 798f of the House Rules and Manual.

The Chair notes another illustrative ruling that is recorded in the Deschler-Brown precedents of the House at volume 10, chapter 28, section 9.22. On that occasion in 1967 the House was considering a joint resolution continuing appropriations for a portion of a fiscal year. An amendment was offered to restrict total administrative expenditures for the fiscal year. Noting that the amendment affected funding beyond that continued by the joint resolution, the Chair sustained a point of order that the amendment was not germane.

The amendment proposed in the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin addresses funding not continued by the pending joint resolution. Where the joint resolution confines itself to funding within one department, the amendment ranges to at least six others. As such, the amendment is not germane.

The point of order is sustained. The motion to recommit is ruled out of order.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I most respectfully and reluctantly appeal the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is: "shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. LIVINGSTON

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] to lay the appeal of the ruling of the Chair on the table.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 236, noes 176, not voting 21, as follows:

Miss COLLINS of Michigan changed her vote from "aye" to "no."

So the motion to table the appeal of the ruling of the Chair was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. OBEY

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, at the direction of the minority leader, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Is the gentleman opposed to the joint resolution?

Mr. OBEY. In its present form, yes, I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. OBEY moves to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report back forthwith with an amendment as follows:

Strike all after the resolving clause and insert:

Sec. 101. ENSURED PAYMENT DURING FISCAL YEAR 1996 OF VETERANS' BENEFITS IN EVENT OF LACK OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) PAYMENTS REQUIRED.—In any case during fiscal year 1996 in which appropriations are not otherwise available for programs, projects, and activities of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall nevertheless ensure that—

(1) payments of existing veterans benefits are made in accordance with regular procedures and schedules and in accordance with eligibility requirements for such benefits; and

(2) payments to contractors of the Veterans Health Administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs are made when due in the case of services provided that directly relate to patient health and safety.

(b) FUNDING.—There is hereby appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the payments pursuant to subsection (a), including such amounts as may be necessary for the costs of administration of such payments.

(c) CHARGING OF ACCOUNTS WHEN APPROPRIATIONS MADE.—In any case in which the Secretary uses the authority of subsection (a) to make payments, applicable accounts shall be charged for amounts so paid, and for the costs of administration of such payments, when regular appropriations become available for those purposes.

(d) EXISTING BENEFITS SPECIFIED.—For purposes of this section, existing veterans benefits are benefits under laws administered by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs that have been adjudicated and authorized for payment as of—

(1) December 15, 1995; or

(2) if appropriations for such benefits are available (other than pursuant to subsection (b)) after December 15, 1995, the last day on which appropriations for payment of such benefits are available (other than pursuant to subsection (b)).

SECTION 201. PAY FOR FEDERAL AND DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA EMPLOYEES DURING LAPSE IN APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1996.

(a) PROVISIONS RELATING TO THOSE WHO ARE PERMITTED OR REQUIRED TO SERVE.—Any officer or employee of the United States Government or of the District of Columbia government who is permitted or required to serve during any period in which there is a lapse in appropriations with respect to the agency in or under which such officer or employee is employed shall be compensated at the standard rate of compensation for such officer or employee for such period.

(b) PROVISIONS RELATING TO THOSE WHO HAVE BEEN FURLOUGHED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any officer or employee of the United States Government or of the District of Columbia government who is furloughed for any period as a result of a lapse in appropriations shall not be entitled to basic pay with respect to any portion of such period, except as provided in paragraph (2)

(2) EXCEPTION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any officer or employee referred to in paragraph (1) who is willing and able to serve during the period of the lapse in appropriations—

(A) shall be permitted to serve; and

(B) shall be compensated for any such service in accordance with subsection (a).

(c) DEFINITION.—For the purpose of this section, the term "agency" includes any employing entity of the United States Government or of the District of Columbia government.

(d) APPLICABILITY.—This section shall apply with respect to any lapse in appropriations for fiscal year 1996 occurring after December 15, 1995.

Mr. OBEY (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to recommit be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order but reserve that point of order if the gentleman will make a brief explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana reserves a point of order.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I will not take the 5 minutes I will only take 1.

Mr. Speaker, as it now stands, government workers cannot volunteer to come in to work during the shutdown, but the Speaker has announced tonight that they will nonetheless be paid. What this motion would simply do, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MORAN], is that we simply say that since workers will be paid, the ought to be allowed to come in and work if they want to. That is in essence all this does.

Mr. Speaker, let me simply, in asking for a ruling from the Chair, indicate that I think on both sides of the aisle we recognize that you have tried to do an extremely fair job tonight, and we congratulate you for it.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I echo the gentleman's remarks about the way the Speaker has maintained order throughout this debate.

Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the motion to recommit with instructions because it is not germane to the underlying resolution, and as such is in violation of clause 7, of Rule XVI.

Mr. Speaker, I quote from the Precedents of the House:

> It is not in order to do indirectly by a motion to commit with instructions what may not be done directly by way of amendment.

Mr. Speaker, a specific proposition can not be amended by another proposition broader in scope. The motion to recommit deals with funding and authorizing activities outside the Department of Veterans Affairs, and therefore is not germane to the underlying resolution which deals only with funding for selected activities in this department.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's motion to instruct is not germane, and I ask for a ruling from the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that the purpose of this resolution tonight is to open certain functions of the veterans Department so that the public can receive the benefit of the services from that department.

We are simply saying that since it has already been announced that government workers will be paid afterwards, whether they work or not, that we think they ought to be allowed to work, and I will leave the ruling in the hands of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Using the same reasoning as in the case of the previous point of order, the Chair finds that the amendment proposed in this second motion to recommit exceeds the relatively narrow ambit of the joint resolution by addressing the compensation of Federal employees on government-wide bases. Accordingly, the point of order is sustained, and the motion to recommit is ruled out of order.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. OBEY

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, at the direction of the minority leader, I offer a third motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman remains opposed to the joint resolution?

Mr. OBEY. I do, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. OBEY moves to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report back forthwith with an amendment as follows:

Strike all after the resolving clause and insert:

SEC. 101. ENSURED PAYMENT DURING FISCAL YEAR 1996 OF VETERANS' BENEFITS IN EVENT OF LACK OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) PAYMENTS REQUIRED.—In any case during fiscal year 1996 in which appropriations are not otherwise available for programs, projects, and activities of the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall nevertheless ensure that—

(1) payments of existing veterans benefits are made in accordance with regular procedures and schedules and in accordance with eligibility requirements for such benefits; and

(2) payments to contractors of the Veterans Health Administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs are made when due in the case of services provided that directly relate to patient health and safety.

"(3) all other authorized activities of the Department of Veterans Affairs including processing of existing and new applications for benefits and pensions, processing of certificates of eligibility for homeownership loans and loan guarantees, and payment of salaries of federal government personnel providing health care for our nation's veterans, are continued at a rate for operations not to exceed the rate in existence on December 15, 1995.

(b) FUNDING.—There is hereby appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the payments pursuant to subsection (a), including such amounts as may be necessary for the costs of administration of such payments.

(c) CHARGING OF ACCOUNTS WHEN APPROPRIATIONS MADE.—In any case in which the Secretary uses the authority of subsection (a) to make payments, applicable accounts shall be charged for amounts so paid, and for the costs of administration of such payments, when regular appropriations become available for those purposes.

(d) EXISTING BENEFITS SPECIFIED.—For purposes of this section, existing veterans benefits are benefits under laws administered by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs that have been adjudicated and authorized for payment as of—

(1) December 15, 1995; or

(2) if appropriations for such benefits are available (other than pursuant to subsection (b)) after December 15, 1995, the last day on which appropriations for payment for such benefits are available (other than pursuant to subsection (b)).

Mr. OBEY (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to recommit be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is very simple. The proposition now before the House allows the Veterans Department to open for the purpose of payments of existing veterans' benefits and to provide payments to contractors of the Veterans Health Administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs when due in the case of services, provided that those services directly relate to patient health and safety.

All we would do is add the following language. We would add language saying that the Veterans Department would also be open for all other authorized activities of the Department of Veterans Affairs, including the processing of existing and new applications for benefits and pensions, processing of certificates of eligibility for home ownership loans and loan guarantees, and payment of salaries of Federal Government personnel providing health care for our Nation's veterans.

And that they would be continued at a rate for operations not to exceed the rate in existence on December 15, 1995.

That is all it does. It simply says if you are going to open up the Veterans Department, open it up to everyone.

I would urge the Members of the majority, in the interest of comity, in the interest of rationality, to accept this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] for 5 minutes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to oppose this motion, and I ask that it be defeated. We have made a good-faith effort to address the specific veterans' problems that were included in this bill, so that they can get their checks next week. We should pass this bill.

We want to work with all parties, the White House, the minority, and various members of our committee to take care of the balance of the other concerns down the line. But let us defeat this motion, let us pass the bill, let us conclude our business and let us go home for the night.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 178, noes 234, not voting 21, as follows:

So the joint resolution was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be present due to a family emergency.

On vote #871, the previous question I would have voted "No.".

On vote #872, the motion to table, I would have voted "No."

On vote #873 the motion to recommit I would have voted, "Yes."

On vote #874, House Joint Resolution 134, the targeted C.R., I would have voted "Yes."

GOVERNMENT SHOULD BE OPEN FOR ALL CITIZENS

(Mr. OBEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I simply take this time to explain for the Record why I have cast the only vote against the proposition the House just voted on. I did not vote no because I was opposed to the proposition; as I said during debate, no one was opposed to the proposition. But House rules dictate if I were to be in a position to offer a motion to recommit that I needed to vote "no" on final passage.

I did so because I felt strongly that we should not only open the government for the services provided in the resolution, but should also open the Government for the purpose of other services that could be provided by the veterans department, and all other government employees as well.

The motion that I offered included all of the language of the original resolution, plus the additional language that would have opened up other functions of the veterans department, providing those services as well, and opened up all other agencies of the government which remained closed.

So for procedural reasons, to protect my right to offer that language which included all of the language provided in the original resolution, I was required by the House rules to vote "no".

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO OFFER PRIVILEGED RESOLUTION PROVIDING DEFICIT REDUCTION AND ACHIEVE A BALANCED BUDGET BY FISCAL YEAR 2002

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged resolution at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LaHood). Is the gentleman from Mississippi making a notice?

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. I have a privileged resolution at the desk. As you know, the Chair can either bring this up immediately——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would advise the gentleman from Mississippi that there is no privileged resolution at the desk.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will state his inquiry.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, the inquiry that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has is, has his privileged motion been properly noticed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair believes that the gentleman is trying to properly notice his resolution as privileged.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am informing the Chair of my intention to serve a privileged resolution before this body, and as the Chair knows, under the Rules of the House, the Chair may bring this up immediately or may ask for a 2-legislative-day delay on this matter.

Since the matter involves the highest privilege of the Members collectively, and that is the privilege of doing our constitutionally mandated responsibility of providing for the budget in the appropriations of this country, I would ask for its immediate consideration.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have no budget before this country, and 300,000 good people are wondering whether or not they are going to get paid.

We have a job to do. We are 81 days late in fulfilling our legal responsibility of providing for a budget for this country. The budget that was passed has been vetoed by the President. There are not sufficient votes to get the two-thirds majority to override the President, and it is my intention to submit, as a result of that, privileged resolution H.R. 2530, commonly referred to as the coalition budget, in an effort to break this impasse.

I would like to point out that under rule IV of the Rules of the House of Representatives, Questions of Privilege, clause 1 states questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively. Article I, section 9, clause 7 reads, and I am quoting, "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of an appropriation made by law."

Obviously, we cannot solve this budget impasse until we have passed and the President has approved a budget. Today marks the 81st day that this Congress has been delinquent in fulfilling our statutory responsibility of enacting a budget into law; and again, one has passed, but short of the two-thirds majority needed to override the presidential veto.

Mr. Speaker, by failing to enact a budget into law, this body has failed to fulfill our most basic constitutionally mandated duties. This Congress has failed to appropriate the necessary funds to fulfill the vital functions of our Nation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Mississippi suspend?

The Chair would advise the gentleman, the gentleman needs to make notice to the House of his resolution. The Chair would ask the gentleman to state his notice.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am doing so in telling my fellow Members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Could the gentleman from Mississippi read the title of his resolution in order to give notice to the House?

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Sir, as of today, I am introducing the coalition budget, H.R. 2530, to provide for deficit reduction and achieve a balanced budget by fiscal year 2002, as a privileged resolution and request its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under rule IX, a resolution offered from the floor by a Member other than the majority leader or the minority leader as a question of the privileges of the House has immediate precedence only at a time or place designated by the Speaker in the legislative schedule within 2 legislative days of its being properly noticed. That designation will be announced at a later time.

In the meantime, the form of the resolution proffered by the gentleman from Mississippi will appear in the RECORD at this point.

The Chair is not at this point making a determination as to whether the resolution constitutes a question of privilege. That determination will be made at a time designated for consideration of the resolution.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Will the Speaker recognize me for a unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would advise the gentleman that the title will appear in the RECORD.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. The Chair has fulfilled my request.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. BROWDER Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWDER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. TAYLOR] has filed a motion, and I understand that the Chair has ruled that this will be dealt with by the Speaker in the next 2 days.

My inquiry is this: Does this mean that before we leave this Friday that this request will be scheduled by the Speaker so that the people of this country will not go through Christmas without a budget for the U.S. Government?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would advise the gentleman that consideration will be scheduled within 2 legislative days by the Speaker.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALKER. In the action that just took place here a few minutes ago with regard to the privileged resolution, is the totality of the privileged resolution, namely the budget offered by the gentleman, going to be printed in the RECORD, or just the title?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated earlier the title of the resolution would be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WALKER. So the totality of the resolution would not be printed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The title of the bill will be printed, not the totality.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. TANNER. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, how much notice would the Chair give to the sponsor of the resolution? Would it be tomorrow or would it be Friday, or is it impossible for the Speaker to so advise at the moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair intend to give adequate notice to Members.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of May 12, 1995, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members are recognized for 5 minutes each.

TRIBUTE TO ROBERT WALKER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOX] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FOX of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise on this occasion to speak to my colleagues about someone very special who has been working very hard for this House and this country and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for 20 years. I speak of Congressman ROBERT WALKER who announced this week that he would not be seeking an 11th term in the House of Representatives.

There is no one I can think of presently, in Congress or in recent years, who has been more of a deficit hawk, a budget hawk, or a U.S. Representative extraordinaire. His expertise on parliamentary rules has been the best, and for many of us, like myself, he has been a role model for how to be a U.S. Congressman when it comes to constituent services and legislative advocacy.

His 10 terms of outstanding service to the people of Chester County and Lancaster County in Pennsylvania have certainly shown just what an outstanding Congressman can do for his State and his community. He is Pennsylvania's favorite son, ROBERT WALKER, a champion.

As chairman of the Committee on Science, he has worked to increase research for health care, for jobs, and for science. This is a man who loves this institution, who has respected its traditions, its history. It seems appropriate that the House now stands, Mr. Speaker, poised on the verge of passing a balanced budget for the first time since 1969, and that with Congressman ROBERT WALKER, his inspiration, his spirit, his drive, his enthusiasm have helped to sustain all Members of the House who believe that we can balance this budget, that we can in the next few days or weeks come to an agreement with the President of the United States and the Senate in helping our children, our grandchildren, to pass a balanced budget.

We know from Alan Greenspan that by passing a balanced budget we will reduce interest rates and thereby reduce the cost of home mortgages, car expenses and college costs. The balanced budget is what we need for our country, and ROBERT S. WALKER, the outstanding Congressman from Pennsylvania, will help lead us there, as he has through many fights, to make sure we maintain fiscal responsibility in this country.

I am proud to yield to the gentleman from Arizona [MR. HAYWORTH], for his comments.

Mr. HAYWORTH. I thank my good friend from Pennsylvania, and I would join him in the remarks of respect and affection for our colleague, BOB WALKER.

Mr. Speaker, through C–SPAN, millions of Americans have been able to see the expertise and the grace and the exemplary conduct with which ROBERT WALKER has comported himself on this floor. While it was his brother, Wally, who grew to a taller height and started, both at the University of Virginia and the National Basketball Association, and still labors in the front office of the Seattle Supersonics, I think it is safe to say that BOB WALKER has always stood tall, both for the people of Pennsylvania Dutch country, and more importantly, for the entire citizenry of the United States.

With that, I would yield back to my colleague from Pennsylvania, [Mr. FOX].

Mr. FOX of Pennsylvania. I would yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and let me just say that everybody holds BOB WALKER in great esteem.

I am reminded of a story by Jack Kemp when he was on a plane in the Caribbean, and somebody saw him and started to come toward him, saying, are you a Member of Congress. Jack figured here was another guy coming to recognize him, the potential Presidential candidate and a well-known sports star and Congressman; and when Jack Kemp said, I am, the guy said, well, then you must know BOB WALKER. I have seen him on C–SPAN.

All of us have seen BOB on C–SPAN, but what a lot of folks have not seen is that BOB WALKER is a guy who was always here to help anybody who comes out on the House floor, who has a legislative initiative. Whether you are a freshman or a Member who has been here for 16 years, Bob is always gracious, always willing to help, and maybe most importantly, always ready to fight for you.

I can remember when we did the all-night special orders, and BOB would always be the guy that volunteered for the slot from 2 a.m. to 3 a.m. in the morning. That takes a lot of guts.

A great American, and it is a real tragedy that he is leaving this House, a wonderful friend of all of us.

Mr. FOX of Pennsylvania. I am hoping this special order will change his mind.

I yield to the gentleman from Georgia, Congressman KINGSTON.

Mr. KINGSTON. I feel that I am a second-generation special order guy; I know that I am walking down a trail that was blazed by BOB WALKER and NEWT GINGRICH and JACK KEMP and DUNCAN HUNTER and a lot of guys before us who got a lot of people in the habit of watching C–SPAN, but more importantly got people to tune in to the issues of reducing the size of Government, providing tax relief, welfare reform, cutting down on Government, micromanagement out of Washington, and increasing personal freedom and responsibility, and I attribute that to BOB WALKER.

Mr. FOX of Pennsylvania. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your indulgence and thank you, BOB WALKER, for being a great American and a great Congressman.

THE BUDGET DEBATE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CHRYSLER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Florida [Ms. BROWN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, older Americans have fought this country's wars, built its cities, reared its children and tilled its soil. They deserve much and need much. So said the late Claude Pepper, who served Florida for 15 years in the Senate and 26 years more in the House. He was a true champion for the seniors of Florida and this country.

Mr. Speaker, we all agree that we were sent to Congress to pass a responsible budget. But I do not believe we should balance the budget on the backs of the elderly, the sick, the poor, and the disabled.

Claude Pepper once said, "My one great wish is to live long enough to see the day when this great and prosperous Nation can give every man, woman, and child every bit of health care he or she needs. I think this is a part of the American dream."

Mr. Speaker, I share Claude Pepper's dream. Let us protect seniors. Let us pass a responsible budget, and let us do it now.

I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PALLONE].

Would the gentleman explain for the constituents of Florida why we are into this second shutdown. And I think the first one cost over $800 million?

Mr. PALLONE. Exactly.

I appreciate the gentlewoman from Florida bringing that to our attention. I think that much of that has been lost, unfortunately, during the debate.

The bottom line is that after the first shutdown, both the President and the Congress got together and passed what we call a continuing resolution which allowed the Government to operate for a few weeks while the parties involved worked out their differences over the budget. The resolution that was passed not only called for the Government to continue to operate, it also called for a balanced budget in 7 years, and it recognized certain priorities that had to be protected as part of that budget, such as Medicare, Medicaid, education.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. School lunch.

Mr. PALLONE. Environment, nutrition programs, et cetera. The problem is that when that resolution ran out last Friday, the Republican leadership refused to bring up another continuing resolution. They have not done so Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Monday, Tuesday. Now we are into the fifth day, if you will, without a continuing resolution, which means that the Government continues to be shut down. They have refused so far to meet the agreement, if you will, of the previous continuing resolution.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Does the continuing resolution have anything to do with the budget talks that we can pick up in January and go on until the November election of 1996? Because I really believe that the American people are going to have to resolve this. They have got to decide what kind of House do they want.

Mr. PALLONE. Exactly.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. And whether or not they want this House to be run by extreme radicals.

Mr. PALLONE. Exactly. I think the point is that we had agreed, with the previous continuing resolution, that while we worked out our differences on the budget, the Government would continue to operate. And it set forth an agreement that we would have a 7-year balanced budget, assuming that certain priorities were maintained, such as Medicare and Medicaid and some of the other programs that you mentioned.

The problem now is that the Republicans let that continuing resolution run out and have refused to bring up another one, and as a consequence, the Government shutdown is in a sense the hostage that is being held by the Republican leadership because they cannot get their way, if you will, on the budget.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. I heard some of the freshmen earlier said that they would never vote for another continuing resolution. Did we not just have one on VA?

Mr. PALLONE. We had one on VA.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Did they not vote for it?

Mr. PALLONE. They voted for one just with the VA but they refused to bring up a larger continuing resolution that would prevent the rest of the Government from being shut down. Basically, what they are doing is playing politics, because they know that veterans' benefits will not go out tomorrow. So they agreed to let that go by, but they refused to worry about the other benefits, the other programs, whether it be education or some of the other social programs or agencies, whatever is necessary for various agencies.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. I was talking about Claude Pepper earlier, and I have a picture of Claude and Lyndon Baines Johnson together.

I have heard these Republicans get up here and talk about they want to tear this Government down, brick by brick. I think the American people need to weigh in on how they want this country to look, whether or not they just want this country for the rich and famous or for all of us.

Mr. PALLONE. I think you are absolutely right. This is the first time, and I think it is outrageous, that people have articulated that they are going to close the Government down because they cannot get their way on legislation.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. In closing, you can fool some of the people some of the time but you cannot fool all of the people all of the time.

A TITANIC BUDGET BATTLE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. METCALF] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. Speaker, is there anyone in America that believes that there is no waste in our budget today? That we cannot make cuts or decrease the increases which have been projected, in a $1.6 trillion budget?

We spend over $1.6 trillion each year. Some say there is no way we can cut it at all. Every dollar we try to cut brings a chorus of screams. Any projected increase that we try to decrease, they say will devastate Medicare and will take food out of the mouths of children, it will put the poor right out on the streets.

This is a huge system that has been built, a spending system that has been built over many years. It is producing deficits of hundreds of billions of dollars. Now we have come to the time we have to make the decision.

Everyone in America knows that there is a lot that we can remove from this budget without serious harm to anything. What is going on, then? What is going on in this House? What is going on is a titanic battle that is being waged that will determine the destiny of this Nation.

The question that will be answered in the next 2 weeks, 3 weeks, month or so, will we in this time be able to balance the budget or will we continue with the deficits that are destroying this Nation? This huge $5 trillion debt is strangling America. The interest on this debt will surpass the defense spending, the huge defense spending bill. The interest will surpass defense spending next year in the budget that we start on in the next few months.

My wife and I have realized the American dream. We own our own home, free and clear. We run a small business in our home. It is not a large business, just a small business. But that, to me, and I think to most people, is the American dream.

But let us look to the future. What chance do our children, what chance do our grandchildren have to realize the American dream? A child born in 1995 will pay $187,000 in taxes just to pay the interest on the debt. Just to pay the interest on the debt—$187,000 will buy a pretty good house today. The previous spending has destroyed the American dream for a lot of the children that will be born in 1995, because it is that $187,000 house that they are not going to get, because they had to pay that $187,000 just to pay the interest on the national debt.

Every vote for an unbalanced budget over the last 40 years was a vote to destroy the American dream for our own children.

We have got to look at this interest thing and the amount of money that we pay in interest. England is still paying interest on the money that they borrowed to fight Napoleon. They have paid that principal in interest over 15 times and they still owe that principal.

Mr. Speaker, we have to balance the budget. We have no choice. This is not really negotiable. A balanced budget with honest numbers is the only way that we will protect the American dream for our children and grandchildren, and we must succeed at that.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINGSTON. With both the Democrat and the Republican leaders having an hour left and there being less than 1 hour remaining, we would like to split the time. That being the case, I would like to know how much time each side would have.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Each side will have 17½ minutes.

Mr. KINGSTON. It is my intention to split that time with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PALLONE].

FAILURE TO PASS CONTINUING RESOLUTION A REAL TRAGEDY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of May 12, 1995, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PALLONE] is recognized for 17½ minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to use my time tonight to point out what I consider to be a real tragedy in what has happened here today in the House of Representatives. This morning when we began the session, I was particularly upset because the gentleman from Texas, who is part of the Republican leadership, got up and made a point of the fact that it was incumbent, if you will, on the Republican majority to shut down the Government until they were able to get agreement on the budget.

I strongly disagree with the message that was sent in that regard. As the day went on, we saw speaker after speaker on the Republican side get up and say basically the same thing, which is that if the Republicans cannot get their way on the budget, if the President and I guess the Democrats in the House do not agree on the policy of the budget that the Republicans have put forth, then we should simply shut down the Government and it should not continue to operate until that agreement is reached.

That is totally the opposite of what I believe we should be doing here and what I believe the obligation of the majority is.

The majority that was elected in this House of Representatives in November of 1994, like any majority, has the obligation to govern. The obligation to govern means that the Government continues to operate while you work out your differences with the minority or with the President about what the budget should be.

Speaker GINGRICH actually articulated a few weeks ago exactly what the position is that the Republicans represented today. He said, "I don't care what the price is, I don't care if we have no executive offices and no bonds for 30 days, not at this time."

It is totally irresponsible in my opinion to hold the Government hostage, in essence, and say that unless we get our way on this budget, unless our priorities are met, we are going to keep this Government shut down. That is exactly what we have in front of us.

This evening there was a continuing resolution passed, a continuing resolution, which is what allows the Government to continue to operate, only on one aspect of the government shutdown and that was with regard to veterans' benefits.

But it should be pointed out, as it was today by many of the Democrats, that the price of the Government shutdown is not only millions of dollars that are lost because Federal employees will get paid for doing nothing, and also the fact that the Government has to keep certain essential services going, but also that many Americans who have paid taxes all along simply do not have the benefit of Government services that for many of them are very important or are very necessary.

We only dealt with one aspect of that this evening, and that was with veterans' benefits. Thankfully the Republican majority was willing to bring up the provision that would allow veterans' benefits to be paid starting tomorrow. But for whatever political reasons they saw fit to do that so as not to offend the veterans, the same should be done for every other Government agency and every other Government program. They should be allowed to continue to operate.

Just as an example, we have as of day 5 of this shutdown, this second shutdown now, almost 2 million people who have been turned away from National Park Service facilities. Four hundred thousand people have been turned away from the Smithsonian museums and the National Zoo just here in Washington. Sixty thousand students and parents applying for Pell grants or student loans have not had their applications processed and may not be able to pay for college. Over 780 small businesses have not received SBA guaranteed financing totaling over $120 million in loans. And about 720 calls made to the EPA, the Environmental Protection Agency's hot line for drinking water contamination outbreaks, have gone unanswered.

I could go on. There is a long list of the various Government services that are not functioning now with the shutdown. Again, I would say, what is the reason for this? What possible reason is there to hold the government hostage and to not allow the taxpayers who have paid for these services to receive them and thus be inconvenienced?

We could talk about passport offices, we could talk about many other things that are not being accomplished here.

The problem is that the President and the Democrats in Congress together have a very different sense of a priority for a balanced budget than the Republican majority, and what I have maintained all along is, if there are those differences, and there are, we should continue to operate the government while we work out the differences, and do not misunderstand that the Republican majority, because they control the Congress, they are the only ones that can bring up a continuing resolution and send it to the President so that Government can continue to operate. So, if anyone suggests to you that somehow the President is shutting the Government down, it is simply not true. The legislative responsibility for passing the continuing resolution exists with the Congress and with the majority party that governs the Congress.

Today it was my understanding actually that the leadership in the Republican Party, both Speaker GINGRICH and the House, as well as the Senate leadership in the Senate, were willing to go along with a continuing resolution to reopen the Government, and the President articulated and said that that was the case, and they, both of the gentlemen who lead the House and the Senate, indicated to the President that they were willing to go along with that. But our understanding is that when Speaker GINGRICH went back to the Republican Caucus, he was told mostly by the less senior members, the freshmen and some others perhaps, that that was unacceptable, that the Government should not continue to operate until the budget is signed by the President.

I think that those on our side who have characterized many of the new members of the Republican Party as extremists because of their position on the budget realize now that those extremist elements, if you will, within the Republican Members of Congress are now controlling the show and that even the Speaker, who has the responsibility, if you will, to represent the majority party, does not have the ability any more to control those extremist elements within the Republican Party, the less senior members who want to hold the Government hostage because they cannot get their way on the budget.

Now in the time that I have left I would like to talk about these priorities that the President has set forward and that he insists must be maintained in the context of a 7-year balanced budget before he would sign the bill, before he would sign a budget bill, and I want to stress that these are important priorities, these are priorities that effect every American in some way.

One of the most important, of course, is Medicare.

The problem is that the Republican budget would take so much money out of Medicare that Medicare as we know it essentially would not be able to continue to operate. And for those who doubt that that is the case I will go back to a statement that Speaker GINGRICH made awhile ago on Medicare where he said, "We don't do not get rid of it in round one because we don't think that's politically smart, and we don't think that's the right way to go through a transition period, be we believe it is going to wither on the vine because we think people are voluntarily going to leave it." He said that; it was quoted in the Washington Post on October 26 of this year.

This is the problem. So much money is cut out of the Medicare program under the Republican budget, and the way that the Medicare program is transformed essentially so that those who now have a choice of doctors are essentially pushed into managed care or HMO's where they do not have a choice any more, the changes to the Medicare program are going to be so radical, if you will, and the money is going to be so much less in terms of what is needed to operate a quality Medicare program that Medicare will essentially wither on the vine and eventually cease to exist. That is the major reason why the President and the Democrats in the Congress are so concerned not to go along with this Republican budget.

And, secondly, there is also the Medicaid program which is the health care program for low income individuals, mainly again seniors, the disabled, children, and, in many cases, pregnant women. The Medicaid program under the Republican budget, $163 billion is cut out of it essentially making it so that it cannot cover all the people that are now eligible for Medicaid, and then it is block granted or sent to the State, that money that is essentially cut back is block granted and sent to the States, and the States have to decide whether or not those who are now covered by Medicaid will continue to be covered. And so Medicaid, like Medicare, essentially withers on the vine, it does not have adequate funds, it is block granted, it is no longer guaranteed, and many of the people who now receive it will probably end up with no health insurance because many of the States, with the less money that is involved, will not be able to cover the seniors, the disabled, the children, the pregnant women who are now covered by Medicaid.

Now in the context of this, one of the most egregious, if you will, problems that the President sees and that the Democrats in Congress see, and one of the reasons why they are most unwilling to go along with this Republican budget plan, is because the money that is being taken away from these two health care programs is primarily going to tax breaks for wealthy Americans and wealthy corporations, and one of the main criteria or one of the main concerns that we have is that the Republicans have so far been unwilling to, if you will, eliminate or take back most of these tax breaks in order to finance Medicare and Medicaid.

It would be fairly easy for the Republican leadership to say, "OK, we won't provide these tax breaks to wealthy Americans, we won't provide these tax breaks to wealthy corporations, and we'll use that money that we were going to use for those tax breaks and put it back into Medicare and Medicaid in order to keep those programs viable." But so far there has been no willingness on the part of the Republican leadership to go in that direction, which is one of the reasons why the President can simply not support the Republican budget the way it has been laid out.

Now I have one more chart here that I wanted to, and I only have another 5 minutes, and the gentleman can use his time, so let me just finish this, and if I have a few minutes left, I will yield, but I just wanted to show this chart that gives you some indication of the exploding costs of the Republican tax breaks.

The tax breaks are not only the wrong way to go because they are financing tax breaks for mostly wealthy people in order to cut Medicare and Medicaid, but they also do exactly the opposite, if you will, of what the Republicans say they want to do with this budget. They say they want to balance the budget, they want to eliminate the Federal deficit, and that is certainly a noble goal that both Democrats and Republicans in Congress, as well as the President, want to accomplish. But how in the world do you manage to balance the budget if you provide more tax breaks for wealthy Americans, or for anybody for that matter, and, as you can see, the cost of the tax breaks in the 7 years that the Republican budget sets forth beginning from 1996 into 2002, you can see what that means in terms of the overall budget. It makes it much more difficult to balance the budget, and many of us maintain that by the time the year 2000, or 2001, or 2002 comes around, the effect of giving out so many tax breaks will mean that ultimately the budget is not balanced.

So you can really see, I think it should be clear, why this battle that exists, if you will, between the Democrats and the Republicans, between the President and the Republican majority in Congress is so important for the future of the country. In order to truly balance the budget over 7 years, in order to protect Medicare and Medicaid, in order to protect some of the other priorities that the President wants to maintain such as education, direct student loan programs, environmental protection to make sure that our air and water quality does not deteriorate, all these things are crucial, and it is not just a question of people getting together and saying, you know, we can go along with what the Republicans have proposed because, if the President does and if the Democrats do, there are going to be some major negative impacts on the lives of the average American whether it be their health care, their education, or the quality of their life.

This is important; this is not something that should be trivialized. But I would stress again, and I think in closing, if I could, that the most important thing is that the Government should not be held hostage to the differences between the two parties or between the President and the Republican leadership over the budget. The Government should continue to remain open. A commitment was made when we passed the last continuing resolution a few weeks ago that we were all going to let the Government continue to operate while we negotiated and while we worked out a 7-year balanced budget that would protect the priorities such as Medicare, Medicaid, education, and the environment, and I was really outraged, and I really do not know where we are supposed to go the next few days when so many in the Republican Party in Congress now insist that the Government should remain shut down and that unless the President simply signs on the dotted line what the Republicans want in the budget, that we are going to continue to have this impasse.

This impasse is having a terrible effect on our country. Many of you saw that the stock market once again plunged today. It is going to have a major impact on the economy during the Christmas holiday and beyond, and I think that it is really tragic that so many of my colleagues on the Republican side got up today during the various times of the debate and said that they were insistent on closing the Government down in order to accomplish their goal.

If I have some time left, I would be glad to yield for a question.

Mr. KINGSTON. What I would like to ask you in particular, but not necessarily—I mean you and a lot of other Democrats:

If the Republicans said, "OK, forget the taxes," then would Democrats then say, "OK, we'll balance the budget in 6 years instead of 7?"

Mr. PALLONE. My understanding, and I think that it was brought home to you very clearly today with the coalition—you know the coalition, a group of more conservative Democrats who want to bring up their budget—that one of the things that they have in their budget is that they say we will use the 7 years that the Republicans have asked for, we will eliminate all the tax breaks, all the tax cuts, and we will take a lot of that money and put it back into Medicare and Medicaid in order to preserve those programs.

I think that it is not possible to accomplish the goal. It would be very difficult to accomplish the goal of protecting Medicare and Medicaid if you reduced your time frame to less than 7 and made it 6 or 5.

I would like to see the money from the tax break used to be put back into Medicare and Medicaid and keep the suggested 7-year time limit.

Mr. KINGSTON. And does the gentleman believe that the tax breaks for the working people of America, that, you know, most of it goes to people with a family earning less than $75,000, that that would not help stimulate the economy and, therefore, increase the number of jobs and, therefore, increase the revenues?

Mr. PALLONE. I will say this first of all. I do not agree with the gentleman that the majority of the tax breaks go to middle-income people. I think that I can show, and I do not have the chart here, but I can read some documents to you that show the majority of the money actually goes to wealthy Americans, but I would say to you, just respond to your question, if I could, and I forgot what your question is.

A REALISTIC BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of May 12, 1995, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON] is recognized until midnight.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PALLONE], my friend.

Mr. PALLONE. You mean the stimulation of the economy.

No, I believe that it is more important to balance the budget than to rely on a theory that says with these tax breaks that will go to most wealthy Americans that we can stimulate the economy. I think the economy would be better served by balancing the budget and not using and not providing the tax breaks.

Mr. KINGSTON. I thank the gentleman for his honesty on that. We will have to debate that further and continue.

Let me yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER], my friend.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON] for yielding and, let me just say that in listening to my friend from New Jersey I have learned I have got some new terms for what I call my liberalspeak dictionary. The first term is the rich.

The rich, according to liberalspeak, is anybody who has children, because the tax cuts and credits that are given in the Republican budget are given to people who have children.

☐ 2345

That means if you get a $500 tax credit per child and you are a working guy who pays $1,500 a year in taxes, you have three children times $500, you take $1,500 off your taxes and you have reduced your taxes to zero. If you are a guy that pays $50,000 and you have three children at $500 apiece you take $500 off your $50,000 tax liability, and you still pay $48,500. The first liberalspeak term that they have been using extensively is "the rich." "The rich" are any people that have children. That makes you rich in America. I guess in a way it does.

The other liberalspeak term that we have all been learning is "a cut." This is why we have a $5 trillion deficit today. For the liberals, any increase that is less than 40 percent is a cut, because Medicare payments per senior citizen are going under the Republican budget from $4,800 to in excess of $6,700 per senior.

Mr. KINGSTON. If I could reclaim my time, I think I could enhance the gentleman's words. This is what is happening with Medicare under the Republican plan. It goes from $4,816 in the year 1995 to $7,101 in the year 2002. Only in Washington, DC would that be called a cut. I would suggest it is really a mathematics problem.

Mr. HUNTER. The gentleman is absolutely right. But we have to accept this liberal dictionary because all of our Democrat friends are using it across the country. Any increase in a government program that is less than a 40-percent increase they will call a cut.

Lastly, they have a new term. It is called "radical." Anybody that believes that working men and women who earn money with their own sweat should be allowed to keep that money is a radical. The moderate view, the accepted view for the liberals, is that all the money belongs to the government, and only in times of extreme prosperity can the government afford to give back working men and women the money that they earned with their own sweat. Otherwise, you are a radical. So we have some new terms from the liberal dictionary, and I just heard the fine gentleman from New Jersey expound on those terms and once again define them for us.

Mr. KINGSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYWORTH], but for a minute I want to point out the infamous $1 million check that is waiting here for any Democrat or any member of America who can show where the Republican plan is cutting Medicare. It is interesting that this check is dated December 6, and it has been collecting interest because nobody can prove there is a cut and nobody can collect this check.

Mr. HAYWORTH. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and to have our colleague, the gentleman from California, and another great gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COLLINS] here during the course of this special order with my good friend, the gentleman from Savannah, GA, in the well.

It is worth noting for the record, though, there have been those who have tried to change the terms of the offer, just as they have tried to change the terms of the debate. Indeed as my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] pointed out, this liberal lexicon is not limited only to the other side of the aisle in this Chamber. As my good friends know, Mr. Speaker, that liberal lexicon exists on the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue, with a President who I am sure means well but who has the most inventive approach to history that I have ever seen.

For example, this afternoon the President of the United States went out to a press conference and said that there was one group in this institution that was causing all the problems, these infamous 73 freshman in the House of Representatives. I know my colleagues here take great umbrage at that, because indeed they are part of the new majority.

It is not only 73 percent of the freshman class, nor the 236 or maybe 237 Members now of our new majority, but if the President would check the RECORD he would find, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday when his budget was brought to this floor no one, no Republican, no Democrat, not even the Independent in this Congress cast a vote in favor of that budget.

Mr. KINGSTON. Let me claim the time now, Mr. Speaker, because I want to make sure I understand what the gentleman is saying. Does the gentleman mean to tell me that the President of the United States had a balanced budget on the floor and not one Democrat voted for it? Is that what you are saying?

Mr. HAYWORTH. I would ask my friend to yield, because that is the important caveat. You see, again the President, who talked about a balanced budget as a campaigner in 1992, said we could balance it in 5 years, and who more recently has said 7, 8, 9, 10 years, the President of the United States has yet to send to this Congress a budget that will balance in 7 years. So I think, quite forthrightly and responsibly, Democrats, independents, and Republicans rejected that budget yesterday.

Of course, 2 days prior to today there was another resolution on the floor of this House simply restating the parameters and the guidelines for the balanced budget agreement, the same words the President signed into law 30 days ago agreeing to balance the budget in 7 years, using the honest, nonpartisan numbers of the Congressional Budget Office. On that occasion, 2 days ago, not only did this majority vote for that resolution, but so did three out of every four Democrats, and the lone Independent in this Congress, the self-described Socialist, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. Speaker, I would make this appeal to the President of the United States. Mr. President, thanks for the credit, but in reality, if you fancy yourself a student of history and a self-described policy wonk, take a close look at the real numbers, because you see Republicans, Democrats, and Independents united on this floor, and get real numbers into this budget negotiation process. Then you can join with us, Mr. President, and say that you truly have made history.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, what I wanted to do was get back on the tax issue a minute. We have the distinguished gentleman from Georgia on the Committee on Ways and Means here, and the gentleman from California, Mr. DUNCAN HUNTER, who used to be in charge of the policy committee and knows all these things. It is interesting that the chart I am about to show you was actually developed by the Heritage Foundation which, while it is conservative, is certainly not Republican and is an independent think tank as opposed to some of the charts we are seeing by the Democrats.

This $500 per child tax credit, which we have heard time and time again, "a tax credit for the rich," and I do not know when the Democrat Party crossed the line, but it is obvious if you are rich in the Democrat Party, it is worse than being a criminal, and it is certainly a lot worse than being an illegal alien, given the benefits they want to give to illegal aliens in California. In San Diego, goodness gracious, you cross the border and you are a lot more welcome than somebody is who is rich. Good gosh, a rich person might be an employer.

Here are 89 percent of the people in America who will benefit from the $500 per child tax credit, and almost 90 percent have a family income of $75,000 or less. These are the rich people. So I guess what the extreme left is telling us is that if you make $75,000 or less, as the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] said, if you got a job, they do not like you. You are one of those big, bad, evil rich.

I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

A lot has been said about the agreement in the bill that the President signed some 30 days ago dealing with the balanced budget and the agreement that we would reach one by the end of this legislative session. You asked the gentleman from New Jersey a while ago a very good question about tax policy: Did he think tax policy change would actually help to create jobs, as evidenced by the $500 per child tax credit?

I want to refer to the agreement, too, that the President also agreed with. That is, the last line in the first paragraph says "Further, the balanced budget shall adopt tax policies to help working families and to stimulate future economic growth." Even the President himself believes that if you help working families, and working families are the ones that pay the bills in this country, they are the ones that work, earn a paycheck, and money comes out of that paycheck and comes into the Government, he agrees that if you help those people, you will help and stimulate economic growth, also through tax policy that helps benefit those who provide those jobs for those working people. So the President himself has said, "Let us change and adopt tax policy that helps working America and also stimulates the economy."

Mr. KINSTON. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman, was that candidate Clinton or President Clinton?

Mr. COLLINS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, that is in the law the President signed some 30 days ago. He himself promotes the fact that we need to change and adopt tax codes that will stimulate the economy, and that goes back to the capital gains, the repeal of the depreciation schedule, the alternative minimum tax, the $500 per child tax credit. All of those things will help stimulate the economy, you do have growth, economic growth, as he agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. If the gentleman will yield, one thing we have noticed with the liberals with their new dictionary that says that if you are rich, that means anybody who has children is rich. They have avoided in all of their descriptions of the budget, of the Republican budget, the term children, because they know that the American people have common sense, and if the American people know that the bulk of the tax cuts in the Republican plan are giving anybody who has children $500, count them, $500 per child tax credit, then everybody has enough common sense to realize that that is mostly going to be absorbed by working people.

Rich people do not have 50, 100, 200 children. They do not have more children than people in middle income class or lower income class. They know that everybody has children. They also know that working people, the working guy who is paying $1,500 a year in tax liability who has three children at $500 apiece will see his tax liability totally erased, and the guy who has $50,000 a year in tax liability and has three children at $500 apiece will only have it reduced about 1 percent, down to $48,500.

That is why the Democrats never use the word "children." They think they want to let the American people rely on the notion that there is some obscure formula that we put together that says only the Forbes family gets this tax cut, and that is not true. Anybody with children.

Mr. COLLINS of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield? Let us look at how that $500 actually helps that working family and then simultaneously stimulates the economy. What will they do with the $500? They will spend it. They will spend it on their family. That is how it helps that family, and once they spend it, they spend it normally on consumer goods or some type of service.

That helps stimulate the economy. It is a very positive move for this country to adopt tax policy, as the President has agreed, that will help working families and stimulate economic growth.

Mr. KINGSTON. Well, the thing that I think is also important to remember is that the average middle-income family in the 1950's paid 2-percent Federal income tax. Today that same average middle-income family pays 24-percent Federal income tax, and that does not even take into account all of your State and local taxes that have gone up year after year, and as a result, we have less time as a family to sit down and import information to the next generation: help educate kids, help teach them manners, and help teach them right from wrong. You have to have two-income families just to pay the Government. It has become a lower quality of life.

I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. HAYWORTH. I thank my colleague from Georgia, and I think he absolutely again addresses this situation in the most accurate manner possible. Because again, when we are talking about our children, there is nothing ignoble or selfish about letting hard-working Americans hang on to more of the money that they earn, because as our colleague from California points out, this money is not the Government's; the Government does not create the wealth. Working people create the wealth by the fruit of their own labors. As our colleague from Georgia points out, yes, Americans will spend that money, but it is also true, Mr. Speaker, that those Americans will save that money and invest that money in their children's future.

I thought my colleague from Georgia who stands in the well here in this special hour said it quite well during the course of the debate. This is all about children, and how dangerous and how immoral for us to saddle unborn generations with a debt that my young son faces. John Michael Hayworth, now 2 years old, over $185,000, almost $187,000 in interest on the debt the will have to pay if we do not make a change for the better.

Mr. KINGSTON. Gentlemen, we are about out of time. Let us all wrap up quickly.

Mr. COLLINS of Georgia. Our final word for my colleague from Georgia. You made a very important statement a while ago when you compared the tax policy of 1950 to today and how much more it takes out of a family income.

There has been a lot said in this Chamber about the erosion of family income. The President himself has talked about the erosion of family income. One of the reasons for erosion is taxation. Another is excessive regulations that go into the cost of consumer goods and services. That has accounted for the erosion of family income in this country.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us balance this budget. That is what we are here for. We are not going to leave this Hill until the budget is balanced, and I thank the gentleman for his great leadership in this area.

Mr. HAYWORTH. I would concur in that. I thank our friend from Georgia for organizing this special order, and I would simply say again to the President of the United States, you can try to attack us, but ultimately, the President should work with us, because the future of this Nation, nothing less than the future of this Nation, the future of our children and the future of all Americans is at stake. With that, I yield back to the gentleman.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYWORTH], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COLLINS] and the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] for being with me tonight.

Balanced budget, what does it mean to you? Lower interest rates. Small businesses can expand, create more jobs. It means lower home mortgages, lower car payments, lower student loan rates. It means a better quality of life, and more importantly than anything, it means an honest American Government, one that can look forward to even greater heights.

Mr. COLLINS of Georgia. To sum it up, the only person standing between the balanced budget and the people of this country is the President of the United States, because he vetoed the balanced budget that the leader from the other body and the Speaker of this House were instrumental in passing and sent to his desk. He vetoed it. He stands between the people and the balanced budget, and I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

THE PEOPLE'S WORK

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection without objection.

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I would just simply like to point out that this is more evidence that this House is about the work of the American people. It is this House that has passed appropriations bills that this President has vetoed. He has put Americans out of work. It is his decision; the mantle of leadership rests uneasily on his shoulders.

We are here in the Congress of the United States to lend a helping hand to inject a dose of honesty and reality into these proceedings, and that is why even now, as our friends in the Committee on Rules labor, they are doing so for the highest of purposes: to restore the ideal of limited and effective Government and to achieve the balanced budget which we all have said we want to achieve, for our children deserve no less.

Mr. KINGSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYWORTH. I would be happy to yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, what is curious about this whole process is that we are not cutting spending, unfortunately. We are not freezing spending, unfortunately. We, over a 7-year period of time, are increasing spending 3 trillion new dollars, and the President wants to increase it 4 trillion new dollars.

Mr. HAYWORTH. Would the gentleman from Georgia please repeat those numbers?

Mr. KINGSTON. We, over a 7-year period of time, we being the Republican Party, are suggesting increasing spending 3 trillion new dollars over the next 7 years. The President wants to increase spending $4 trillion over the next 7 years.

Mr. HAYWORTH. The $4 trillion in additional spending is what this President would like to do, and that is the reason he is against a balanced budget?

Mr. KINGSTON. The gentleman talked earlier about the 73 new freshmen, and I assume not 1 of you ran on a platform of increasing spending 3 trillion new dollars. The point being is I really and truly believe the American people want a balanced budget. I believe the time has come for it, and I also believe, to paraphrase Dwight W. Eisenhower, that once the American people make up their mind to do something, there is not much you can do to stop it.

So I believe, thank the Lord, that this is beyond the President, this is beyond Congress, this is beyond the Senate. This is something the American people want, and therefore, I think we are going to get a balanced budget.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYWORTH. I am happy to yield to our friend from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman just hit the nail on the head, because you mentioned the time. A number of our friends on the other side of the aisle call a balanced budget a noble goal, but it is never the right time to have it. It is always the right time to increase another program by 50 percent, because if you increase it by less than 40 percent, they will call it a cut, but it is never quite the right time to have a balanced budget.

I think you are exactly right. The American people think that this is the right time. If we leave this Hill without having a balanced budget over this next 5, 10, 15 days, we will have failed the American people.

Mr. KINGSTON. On that subject, I want to mention that I know Mr. Hayworth knows this story, because I have told it before, about the guy that goes to the farmer and wants to borrow his friend's ax and he goes next door and he says, "I want to borrow your ax today; I have to chop some wood." The guy says to the farmer, "I do not want to lend you my ax," and the farmer says, "why not?" He says, "I am making soup today." He says, "making soup? What does that have to do with me borrowing your ax?" He says, "nothing, but if I do not want to do something, any excuse is a good one."

What we are seeing on issue after issue is: yes, I want to balance the budget, but not here, not now, not this one, not that program.

I yield back to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. HAYWORTH. I thank the gentleman, and I thank the Speaker.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

TRANSFORMATION: HELPING THE NEEDY BECOME NON-POOR

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. GINGRICH. On this floor, I've often discussed the book "The Tragedy of American Compassion," where author Marvin Olasky examined over 300 years of what has worked in American social policy. His main point: You do not want to maintain the poor, you want to transform them. The goal of helping is to get them to be non-poor. You help an addict by getting them to give up their addiction. You help an alcoholic by getting them to be a recovering alcoholic. You work to transform people, because if you only maintain them, you will ruin their lives.

One of our colleagues, the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. MFUME, knows more than a little bit about this kind of transformation. His life is a testimony to it. He recently announced his decision to leave this body to assume the Executive Directorship of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. His very personal journey is detailed poignantly in Courtland Milloy's excellent column from the Sunday, December 17 Washington Post. As the gentleman embarks on a very different mission of transformation, we wish him well. I submit the Post column into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Certain lessons should transcend either party or ideological lines:

[From the Washington Post, December 17, 1995.]

TRANSFORMED, MFUME LEADS BY EXAMPLE

(By Courtland Milloy)

In explaining his transformation from street dude to political leader, Kweisi Mfume talks of having had a "spiritual experience." This is not to be mistaken for a religious occasion, such as going to church. It's more akin to a spiritual emergency, or crisis, in which Mfume tried for years to change his ways but found willpower alone to be insufficient.

Mfume recalls the days when his name was Frizzell Gray, and how he and his buddies used to stand outside a liquor store in Baltimore, drinking alcohol and telling lies. On one particular night while in his early twenties, he was overpowered by a feeling of ruination, of being a man on a road to nowhere. It was in that moment of truth, he says, that he received the courage and strength, some would say grace, to start a new life.

Now that Mfume has been selected to serve as president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People much is being made of the man he became after that night on the street corner. He went on to become a radio disc jockey, a Baltimore city councilman and a member of the U.S. House of Representatives.

But Mfume's true value has little to do with his job descriptions. It is the process of his personal change that holds the key to the transformation of the NAACP; it is the spiritual emergency of Frizzell Gray that points the way to real advancement for African Americans.

"People thought I was crazy," Mfume told Peter J. Boyer of the New Yorker magazine last year. "But that night I left that corner and prayed and asked for God's forgiveness and asked my mother to please forgive me this one time for letting her down. I had let her down—that was not the way I was raised.

"I said that if I had just one more chance, I would never, every again go back to that, and I would try to find a way to atone for it. And I cried on the floor that night on my knees. I made a very real promise to myself, to my mother and to God that night—that if I could just get to that point and get one more chance I would do everything I could do to make a difference."

Mfume had to fight to get off that corner. His former drinking buddies would not let him just walk away. He says they regularly beat him up until they decided that he was a "lost cause" and finally left him alone.

Mfume learned a most important lesson from those struggles: Sometimes you may have to take a fall to take a stand.

Among the most difficult tasks facing Mfume now is redefining the struggle for civil rights; no one seems to know for sure where to go from here. But Mfume has a pretty good idea. His story suggests that we don't have to go anywhere, that we need only stand where we are and begin to treat those around us with courtesy, kindness, justice and love.

"You are not a man because you killed somebody," Mfume said last year during a Father's Day service at St. Edwards Catholic Church in West Baltimore. "You're a man when you know how to heal somebody." As Boyer described the scene, "it was no greeting card homage to dear Dad, but, rather, call to arms in a war for cultural survival."

Some would say that Mfume won that war when he went back to school and earned a high school equivalency degree in 1968. But it was when he began taking responsibility for the children he had fathered out of wedlock that he became a real winner.

Some would say that he won when, as a disc jockey, he stopped playing jock rap music in favor of political dialogue and jazz. But more important was Mfume's newfound attitude of gratitude that had allowed him to work at the radio station as a low-paid gofer until he had learned some skills.

Mfume, now 47, has been elected to Congress five times since 1986. He has served on the powerful House Banking Committee and, in 1992, became chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus.

But he sacrificed a secure job to help resurrect the NAACP, an organization that, for all intents and purposes, is dead. It died the day black Americans forgot where we came from and began to act as if the modicum of success that some of us enjoy had somehow been won through personal charm and good looks instead of the struggles and sacrifice of others.

This misguided sense of self-reliance, brought on in part by a profound ignorance of history, is probably the single most important reason black America has been brought to its knees.

To make his change, Mfume had to admit that he was spiritually bankrupt and that he needed help from a power greater than himself. That honesty paid off with a new consciousness, and his willingness to be of service to his fellow man has resulted in a new energy, insight and intuition worthy of his new name, which means "conquering son of kings."

The NAACP, like much of black America, is in the same boat that Frizzell Gray had been in. But with Mfume at the helm, there is hope that what happened to him can happen to others as well.

He is submitted for the Meritorious Service Medal.

Command Sergeant Major (Ret.) Heinzler has not only provided faithful and dedicated service to the Missouri National Guard, but to his country as well. I urge my colleagues to join me in congratulating him on his service.

THE CLINTON DEFENSE POSTURE WILL RATTLE OUR MILITARY FOR YEARS TO COME

HON. RANDY "DUKE" CUNNINGHAM

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, newspapers being delivered across the country are hitting the doorsteps of military families hard enough to rattle their households. The papers, radio, and the television are carrying President Clinton's message that it is no longer worth the trouble to serve your country in the armed services.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress has made the difficult choices that will take this Government to a balanced budget by 2002, while at the same time re-establishing the security of our Nation. Just this week, we sent the President H.R. 1530, a Defense authorization bill that restores a reasonable quality of life for our military, sustains basic military readiness, reinvigorates the Pentagon's efforts to modernize weapons, and makes a downpayment on our effort to make the Pentagon run more like a business.

The bill gets the Pentagon back into the business of defending our country, without a skyrocketing Defense budget.

Despite the fact that this bill includes a long overdue 2.4-percent pay raise, a 5.2-percent increase in housing allowance for our troops and their families, and $35 million to educate children of military personnel, the newspapers now tell us that President Clinton will veto that bill.

Any sergeant, colonel, admiral, or general will tell you that their most important asset is a well-trained and dedicated man or woman. Unfortunately, because of a declining quality of military life and number of broken Government promises, the rank and file soldier and sailor is becoming an increasingly rare asset.

We have American soldiers and sailors trying to feed their families with food stamps. Some of the kids that the President is sending into harm's way in Bosnia are leaving their families behind in housing that is substandard. Clinton's historic 1993 tax hike not only forced more taxes on hard-working middle-income American families—despite a promise to actually cut taxes—it also delayed COLA's for military retirees by three-quarters of a year—breaking a promise that was made to many of those men and women while they served this country overseas and at war. The Defense authorization bill fixes the Clinton COLA grab.

The veterans, retirees, and active military families that I talk to every day tell me that they don't trust the Government anymore. Fully half of this country's new military enlistees come from military families, and those families are beginning to tell their kids that it just isn't worth it. As a 20-year veteran of the U.S. Navy, I dedicated my life and service to this country in exchange for a few promises of pay and benefits. If the Government, led by President Clinton, continues to break those promises and deny a reasonable quality of life, our military families will find it even more difficult to dedicate themselves to military service.

Mr. Speaker, what the President is doing is wrong. I challenge him to change his ways and demonstrate a commitment to our men and women in uniform. At a time when he plans to send over 32,000 troops into war-torn Bosnia, enactment of the Defense authorization bill is a good place to start.

HONORING THE LUDLOW BOY'S SOCCER TEAM'S STATE CHAMPIONSHIP VICTORY

HON. RICHARD E. NEAL

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to pay tribute to Coach Tony Goncalves and his Ludlow High School Lions boy's soccer team for their outstanding 4-to-1 victory over Somerville High School to win the Massachusetts Boys Division I State Soccer Championship. The impressive performance by the Lions in the championship capped off a tremendous 17–2–3 campaign for Coach Goncalves and his team and earned them a spot in the top 25 of the Umbro Boys High School Soccer Poll. Over the years Ludlow High School has enjoyed a rich tradition of soccer excellence and this team will certainly be remembered as one of the best in Ludlow High School history.

I would also like to recognize Coach Goncalves' assistants Jack Vilaca, Greg Kolodziey, and Jon Cavallo for their outstanding efforts throughout this championship season. It is the unsung efforts of people like these that often make championships possible, and Ludlow was quite fortunate to be assisted by such able individuals.

Finally, I would like to recognize the players who delivered this spectacular victory: Seniors, Bob Nascimento, Eddie Pires, Rich Huff, John Summerlin, Aaron Majka, Carlos Gomes, Adriano Dos Santos, Wesley Manuel, Chris Goncalves, Mark Eusebio, Jeff Leandro, Juniors, Robe Gomes, Matthew Goncalves, Adriano Genovevo, Danny Elias, Jason Alves, Ryan Lemek, Sophomores, Alex Carvalho, Dave Garcia, Jon Haluch, and Justin Larame.

The achievements of these young men are a tremendous source of pride for not only the town of Ludlow but for the entire Second Congressional District. I am honored to represent such outstanding individuals and I join with the citizens of the Second Congressional District in offering a most heartfelt congratulations. I would also like to wish the returning players the best of luck as they embark on their title defense next season.

HONORING A McCREARY COUNTY LEADER

HON. HAROLD ROGERS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor my good friend Napoleon "Nip" Perkins who recently passed away just shy of his 90th birthday. My family and thousands of others throughout McCreary County and southern Kentucky are deeply saddened by this tragic loss.

Our area has lost a topnotch businessman, an inspiring civic and community volunteer, a political leader, and a good friend. He helped everyone he could and always was willing to sacrifice his time for others.

Nip Perkins was a retired land agent and an engineer for Stearns Coal and Lumber Co., where his high energy, friendly style is what always stood out most.

Politics was where Nip was most influential. Serving as a field representative for my two predecessors in Congress, Congressmen Eugene Siler and Tim Lee Carter, he has been a recognized leader for more than seven decades.

Nip was also a great confidant for me, always keeping his ear close to the ground and my best interests at heart. He was wise, informed, and always positive.

Nip served six terms as the McCreary County Republican chairman and was the first inductee of the Fifth Congressional District Lincoln Club Hall of Fame for his honorable and dedicated service.

I could not think of a better person to be our first Hall of Fame inductee.

In addition to his political service, Nip was a former McCreary County master commissioner and served on the County Selective Service Board. He was a 65-year member of the Orie S. Ware Lodge in Stearns and the 32d degree Mason in the Valley of Covington.

My heart goes out to Nip's wife of 62 years, Evelyn Anderson Perkins, and his wonderful family. He was a great friend and a good man, and he will be sorely missed.

ADDRESS BY CAPT. MARTY SMITH

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, On October 14, 1995, Capt. Marty Smith, commander of the U.S.S. Jefferson City addressed the annual Mid-Missouri Navy League Navy Birthday Ball in Jefferson City, MO. This speech is set forth herein:

SPEECH GIVEN AT THE 1995 MID-MISSOURI NAVY LEAGUE NAVY BIRTHDAY BALL HELD ON OCTOBER 14, 1995 IN JEFFERSON CITY, MO

Congressman and Mrs. Skelton, President Green, members of the mid-Missouri Navy League, and citizens of Jefferson City, it's a great honor and privilege for me to speak to you all tonight in the ship's namesake city. I, along with my eleven shipmates, have had a wonderful time since we arrived here Friday. Crew members who have been here before have told us of the friendliness and hospitality of the great state of "Missoura", and we are finding it all true. Everyone has been wonderful, starting with Herman Smith and Petty Officer Wall who picked us up in St. Louis early Friday morning, to the host families who have gone out of their way to make us feel like adopted sons.

Well, we missed you all last year, because as most of you know, last October, the ship was in the middle of a Western Pacific deployment, having all sorts of adventures in the Sea of Japan with the Kitty Hawk Battle Group. And yes, next year you'll have toast us in absentia because we'll once again be deployed, this time with the Karl Vinson Battle Group in the Arabian Gulf. Perhaps you'll be able to delay the festivities for awhile until we return in mid-November!

I don't get paid to make speeches, but if there's one thing about public speaking I do know, it's that the hardest audience in the world is a bunch of submariners and submariner supporters sitting around waiting for the speech to end so they can resume the party. So let me just fill you in briefly on what we've been up to in the past year, and what our future schedule holds.

We got back from our maiden deployment last year a couple of days before Christmas, and what a deployment it was * * * So unique, with so many challenges, for such a relatively inexperienced crew. I can't possibly convey to you how proud I was of the crew as they put in 110 percent every single day for six months away from their friends and loved ones. They did such a good job, as a matter of fact, that as Congressman Skelton can tell you, I was asked to give a debrief of the deployment to the top admiral of the Navy, the Chief of Naval Operations, Admiral Boorda. This kind of recognition, by the way, only happens to a very few ships every year. In addition, the crew was awarded a total of 4 Navy Commendation Medals, 25 Navy Achievement Medals, and over 50 Flag Officer Letters of Commendation. I can't give you the details of our deployment, obviously, for security reasons, but JFC, as we're known in message traffic shorthand, accomplished many unique firsts, achieved innovative and significant tactical breakthroughs across the spectrum of submarine operations, including anti-diesel ASW, tomahawk strike warfare, and very shallow water operations. We visited Japan, South Korea, Singapore, Hong Kong for Thanksgiving, and Pearl Harbor on the way home. The crew was underway, underwater, for over 78 percent of the six months, enjoyed great liberty visits, and even found time for a humanitarian project at an orphanage in Singapore. The ship steamed more than 40,000 miles on nuclear power with no major equipment problems, which was especially notable since we had only a single ten-day maintenance period over the entire six months. The contributions Jefferson City made to the Kitty Hawk battle group were real and played a major role in helping Admiral Blair, the Battle Group Commander, to complete his assigned mission—to provide a stabilizing and influential presence in the Western Pacific after the dictator of North Korea, Kim il Sung, died in early July 1994, with no apparent successor. As you may remember, there was more than a little concern because of the leadership void and the vast military forces which North Korea has poised just north of the 39th parallel. So Jefferson City and the rest of the Battle Group remained tethered to the South Korean peninsula, instead of going to the beautiful Arabian gulf, and we followed the traditions of several famous WWII submarines, such as CDR Mush Morton and Electrician's Mate Herman Smith seated in the back there, in seeing just how yellow the yellow sea can be. In recognition of our efforts, Jefferson City received the first of many unit commendations she will undoubtedly receive during her 30-year career, a Meritorious Unit Commendation, which is represented by a ribbon you see on our chests tonight and a pennant which we fly proudly from our sail inport.

Anyway, I or any of the crew here tonight will be glad to answer your questions about the ship or the deployment. We also brought the ship's photo album here, which you're welcome to take a look at. It's too bad that the old COB, Master Chief Harden, isn't here to explain a couple of those pictures!

Since the deployment, Jefferson City has been tasked with several local operations in the Southern California area with other ships and submarines, some torpedo testing in the Pacific Northwest on a couple of trips, a major tactical inspection which we did very well on, and had the distinct pleasure of hosting some of you for a VIP cruise last June. In August we started a 3-month shipyard modernization period in San Diego. Right now the boat is in drydock, getting many improvements, which will make us quieter, faster, and deadlier to our potential adversaries. When Jefferson City returns to sea in late-November, we will head up to Alaska for sound trials and then return to port just before Christmas following a big engineering inspection. In February and March we conduct training exercises with our new boss, the Karl Vinson Battle Group, and then start our second six month deployment in mid-May. And for those of you waiting to visit the ship until we move to Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, that date has been firmed up and is now November of 1997.

You may have also heard about another VIP cruise we hosted, this one for Mr. George Will, the national political columnist who writes in Newsweek and over 250 news papers nationwide. After his cruise he wrote a very impressive essay for Newsweek magazine which resulted in several nice accolades for the ship. I'd like to quote the beginning paragraph from Mr. Will's essay for those of you who didn't get a chance to read it. The back cover page of the Sept 3 issue of Newsweek begins thusly: "Aboard the USS Jefferson City (SSN 759) underway off San Diego—Submariners say there are just two kinds of ships: submarines and targets. Feel free to disagree, but smile when you do, because the 140-man crew of this fast attack nuclear submarine is armed. It carries torpedoes, Harpoon anti-ship missiles for distances torpedoes cannot travel—far over the horizon—and Tomahawk land-attack cruise missiles. (Two submarines of this class, one in the Red Sea and one in the Mediterranean, launched a total of 12 tomahawks during the gulf War). The Jefferson City can cruise quietly at above 25 kts submerged and its acoustic detection systems can find quiet adversaries. The psalmist didn't know the half of it when he wrote that they who go down to the sea in ships see "wonders in the deep." This ship is a wonder of tightly packed technology. End quote. Mr. Will then goes on with an insightful and accurate discussion of the contribution of the nuclear submarine to modern warfare and why the United States needs to keep on the leading edge of undersea warfare, in front of the Russian submarine force and other countries with modern submarines.

What Mr. Will doesn't discuss is the sailor or officer, the Petty Officer Campbell's and the LT Smiths, standing watch, day and night, 6 hrs on and a quick 12 hrs off, for weeks on end away from his friends and loved ones, deep under the ocean's surface. These men and women are something that no country can buy from a Russian army-navy surplus store, and is, and will always be, the difference between the United States Navy and all other navies. These people are why we are here, celebrating the 220th birthday of the greatest navy in the world. Our top boss of the Pacific Fleet, Admiral Zlatoper, who toured our ship last summer in Japan, sent out the following message this past week: quote "The Navy's 220th birthday finds the Pacific Fleet emerging from its restructuring as a lean formidable, combat ready force with a strong commitment of quality of life for our people. America needs its navy more than ever as we contend with regional conflicts, proliferation of weapons, and political uncertainties around the globe. Today the Navy-Marine Corps team is forward-deployed, first on the scene, and flexible enough to respond to almost every contingency from the sea. With fewer U.S. bases overseas and uncertain access to bases of the nations, the Navy will be the primary guarantor of American interests in the Pacific for decades. End quote."

And the Navy needs your continued support as Navy League members, educating the public on the need to maintain a strong maritime armed service and helping to recruit quality people like the officers and crew you see here tonight. I was on a Trident ballistic missile submarine on alert patrol in the Northern Pacific when the Soviet Union dissolved, ending the Cold War. Yet there was no celebration or overt glee—just the feeling that our mission had changed in ways we didn't quite know yet. And today, one gulf war later, the world is not a safer, more stable place for you and your children, but more unstable than ever before. And the United States is the only country which will make the right things happen, when we choose, because our Navy, first on the scene, has the "right stuff." As George Will concludes his Jefferson City essay, "And the history of this century teaches a grim truth: When at peace the nation should always assume that it may be living in what subsequent historians will call "interwar years."

But now I'd like to conclude my remarks so that we can all enjoy these interwar years. (Pause) And I'd like to especially thank Melody Green for her dedicated work as President of the Navy League in maintaining what is undoubtedly one of the strongest and closest ties between a ship and her namesake city. I know that this visit is one of the highlights of my naval career, and I think it is for my crew here tonight as well. Knowing how much you support us, and your warmth and friendship, makes us work a little bit harder every day and puts a proud gleam in our eyes when we say we are on the USS JEFFERSON CITY. On behalf of my crew, I would like to express our heartfelt appreciation for your wonderful hospitality, and your work as members of the Navy League in keeping the United States Navy such that generations to come can continue to enjoy such birthday celebrations as we enjoy tonight. Thank you all very much.

POTABLE DRINKING WATER FOR PARTS OF MONTANA

HON. PAT WILLIAMS

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, today there are folks who are forced several times each week to travel miles to fill tanks and barrels with pure water to drink. The situation I refer to is not somewhere in a Third World country, but—remarkably—in Valley County, Montana. Because groundwater supplies in this part of Montana are not potable, the residents of these communities drive in their trucks for hours each week, both summer and winter, to deliver this water to hundreds of people.

The irony of this situation is that these folks live adjacent to one of the largest bodies of water ever developed by the Federal Government in the West, the Fort Peck Reservoir, which stores over 18 million acre feet. The bill

I am introducing today will authorize the development of a rural municipal water system for the residents of the Fort Peck Rural Water District. This much needed project will tap into Fort Peck Reservoir to construct a safe and reliable drinking system for both municipal and agricultural purposes. When this project is completed, it will also enable this area of Montana to attract economic development, which up to now has been stifled due to the unavailability of water.

Mr. Speaker, the Bureau of Reclamation has completed a needs assessment and feasibility study on this project, and I am proposing its construction through a partnership arrangement where State and local interests will contribute 20 percent of the cost toward its completion. The feasibility study estimates that the total Federal expenditure will be less than $6 million. If we can afford to spend much more than this to help undeveloped nations all around the world to develop safe supplies of drinking water, we can certainly afford to do this for folks living in Montana.

A TRIBUTE TO CARL L. "PAT" PATRICK

HON. MAC COLLINS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. COLLINS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a real gentleman of Georgia. Carl L. "Pat" Patrick of Columbus is a man who is known and admired greatly by industrial, civic and community leaders throughout our State. He is the founder and chairman of Carmike Cinemas Inc. which operates movie theaters throughout Georgia and the South.

And while he is known best for his work in the cinema industry, it is his generosity and selfless charitable acts for which I commend this man. Pat and his wife, Frances, have long been supporters of and contributors to Columbus community causes such as Columbus Technical Institute, the Columbus Museum and the John B. Amos Community Cancer Center at the Medical Center.

Pat's most recent contribution, however, is one of his greatest. He donated $1 million to St. Francis Hospital of Columbus—the hospital where his son was born during the facility's first year of operation in 1950. St. Francis now specializes in cardiac medicine and the Patricks want to ensure the hospital is able to purchase the necessary equipment to keep pace with the strides being made in this field.

On a more personal note, when Julie and I received our Christmas card from Pat and Frances this year, we had a most pleasant and touching surprise awaiting us. In addition to the wonderful holiday message, the card informed us that a contribution had been made by the Patricks in our name to the Will Rogers Memorial Fund.

Again, I commend Carl L. "Pat" Patrick. He has touched the lives of so many people in so many ways with his warmth and generosity. Thank you Pat and Frances.

SINGLE-ASSET BANKRUPTCY

HON. JOE KNOLLENBERG

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a bill to address an injustice that exists within title 11 of the United States Code regarding single asset bankruptcies.

This injustice stems back to the 103d Congress when an 11th hour decision placed an arbitrary $4 million ceiling on the single asset provisions of the bankruptcy reform bill. The affect has been to render investors helpless in foreclosures on single assets valued over $4 million.

To rectify this problem, my bill eliminates the $4 million ceiling, thereby allowing creditors the ability to recover their losses. Under the current law, chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code becomes a legal shield for the debtor. Upon the investor's filing to foreclose, the debtor preemptively files for chapter 11 protection which postpones foreclosure indefinitely.

While in chapter 11, the debtor continues to collect the rents on the commercial asset. However, the commercial property typically is left to deteriorate and the property taxes go unpaid. When the investor finally recovers the property through the delayed foreclosure, they owe an enormous amount in back taxes, they receive a commercial property left in deterioration which has a lower rent value and resale value, and meanwhile, the rent for all the months or years they were trying to retain the property went to an uncollectible debtor.

My bill does not leave the debtor without protection. First, it is only as a last resort when the investor brings a foreclosure against a debtor. This usually is after all other efforts to reconcile delinquent mortgage payments are unsuccessful. Second, the debtor retains up to 90 days to reorganize under chapter 11. It should be noted, however, that single asset reorganizations are typically a false hope since the owner of a single asset does not have other properties from which he can recapitalize his business.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, my bill helps all American families by making their investments more secure and more valuable. The hardworking American families who depend on their life insurance policies and who have paid for years into their pensions will save millions in reduced costs. My bill protects the "little guy" from being plagued with years of litigation while the commercial property owner continues to collect the rent to line his own pockets.

WHAT'S WRONG ON THE RIGHT

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention the following article from the "Outlook" section of the December 17 Washington Post. The author, noted Boston University economics professor Glenn Loury, has a valuable lesson for both conservatives and liberals alike. Though condemning the paternalism of the left, which has helped exacerbate the awful conditions of our inner cities, he observes that "a conservatism worthy of majority support would not view with cool indifference a circumstance in which so many Americans suffer such unspeakable degradation." I enter the full article into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and urge all my colleagues to read it.

[From the Washington Post, Dec. 17, 1995]

WHAT'S WRONG ON THE RIGHT: SECOND THOUGHTS OF A BLACK CONSERVATIVE

(By Glenn C. Loury)

The recently deceased British writer Kingsley Amis, celebrated by conservatives on both sides of the Atlantic, was never comfortable with political movements nor those who champion them. In the poem, "After Goliath," Amis wryly noted that "* * * even the straightest of issues looks pretty oblique when a movement turns into a clique." As a black American who nevertheless came to call himself a conservative, I have recently watched with growing dismay how this "movement" has dealt with racial issues, and have thereby gained new appreciation for the wisdom of Kingsley Amis.

Looking back, three factors seem to have been paramount in my move toward conservatism. The first attraction was that it was not liberalism. By the end of the 1970s I had become disgusted with the patronizing relativism that white liberals seemed inevitably to bring to questions of race. Wearing their guilt on their sleeves, they were all too ready to "understand" the shortcomings and inadequacies of blacks. Obsessed with the wrongs inflicted by society on the supposedly hapless victims of discrimination, they were blinded to the desperate need of these "victims" to take responsibility for their own lives. They therefore supported and reinforced what I saw as the debilitating tendency among many blacks to avoid facing squarely the real challenges of the post-civil rights era.

There was hypocrisy in this liberal stance. Though advocating racial equality, liberals did not treat blacks and whites as moral equals: Historic oppression precluded blacks from being held accountable for their actions; whites, suffering no such disability, warranted criticism by liberals because they could choose to stop being racists, or to become more generous and compassionate. In effect, the liberals were saying that whites were powerful moral agents, and blacks were pitiable subjects shaped by forces outside themselves. This smacked of racism, and I hated it.

The second attraction of conservatism was that, on the range of policy issues with which I was most concerned, it made intellectual sense to me. As a professional economist, I have always been sensitive to the deep incentive problems that plague the liberal social vision. High taxes, heavy-handed regulation, bureaucratic service provision and expansive social benefits tend to reduce economic growth and foster dependence. Some social programs would always be necessary, of course, but liberals seemed too little concerned about the costs of their ambitions. Moreover, again in the late 1970s, I watched workers in the auto and steel industries price themselves out of their burgeoning international markets while liberals cheered them on. Public employee unions often seemed to be feathering their own nests, with little apparent concern for the public interest, and with the broad support of the Democratic Party.

Finally, the cultural assumptions of social conservatism seemed like an appealing alternative to those of liberal secularism. In no small part, my move to the political right has been a move away from the people on the left who seemed unremittingly hostile to any evocation of spiritual commitments in the public square. With the family disintegrating before our very eyes, liberals could only heap ridicule on "traditional values" advocates who expressed alarm. In the face of over 1 million abortions per year, liberals could find no place in their political lexicon for a discourse on the morality of this course of action in our society.

For all of these reasons, I was drawn to embrace conservatism. Yet now, some years later, these same beliefs are provoking my growing discomfort with the conservative ascendancy, particularly on the issue of race.

It is certainly true that liberals adopted a condescending posture on racial questions. Their methods—such as strong affirmative action leading to racial double standards, or an excessive concern to avoid "blaming the victim" that precluded acknowledgment of social pathology—were definitely flawed. But there was never much doubt that liberals sought to heal the rift in our body politic engendered by the institution of chattel slavery. The liberal goal of securing racial justice in America was, and is, a noble one. I cannot say with confidence that conservatism as a movement is much concerned to pursue that goal.

This is not the old canard that conservatives are inherently racists because believers in states' rights opposed the civil rights revolution. Rather, my concern is that too many conservatives seem blind to the need to constructively engage the problem of racial division. Yet the success of any governing coalition, whether it is the conservative "revolution" or something else, will ultimately depend largely on how well it deals with a problem that cannot be wished away.

It is now fashionable for conservatives to attribute the catastrophe unfolding in the urban ghettos to some combination of mistaken liberal policies and the deficiencies of inner-city residents themselves. Yet a conservatism worthy of majority support in this country would not view with cool indifference a circumstance in which so many Americans suffer such unspeakable degradation, from lack of shelter, health care, education, nutrition or any hope for a better life. The efforts of various conservative writers to attribute this deep-seated, complex problem to the disincentives of federal assistance programs, the so-called pathologies of black culture, or the cognitive disabilities of certain group of Americans, seem designed mainly to rationalize their disengagement from it.

Where is their passion? Where is their moral outrage? In light of the scale of the tragedy unfolding in cities across the land, the narrowly academic and highly ideological posture of conservative intellectuals—who are in effect saying, "Too bad about what's happening, but we told you liberals so"—is simply breathtaking. Is it paranoia for a black to wonder whether this posture toward urban problems would be embraced with such confidence among conservatives if those inner-city hell holes were populated by whites?

Conservatives should view with skepticism the notion that economic or biological factors ultimately underlie behavioral problems like those involving sexuality and parenting. After all, behaviors of this sort reflect people's basic understandings of what gives meaning to their lives. The idea that the mysteries of human motivation within the family are susceptible to calculated intervention by the state would have been rejected out of hand by a classical conservative like Edmund Burke, to whom the phrase "conservative revolution" would have seemed an oxymoron. Yet, today's conservative revolutionaries would have us believe that only by dismantling the federal establishment can the deepest social problems of American society be solved.

I doubt that the most clever of economists (and I know some smart ones) could design an incentive scheme to insure responsible parenting that would work as effectively as the broad acceptance among parents of the idea that they are God's stewards in the lives of their children. The best pregnancy deterrent may be to inculcate in the heart of each adolescent the belief that, as Paul wrote to the Corinthians, "Your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit . . . Therefore, honor God with your body.

There is also wisdom in the New Testament for those conservatives who see in America's black communities another country, separate from and unrelated to the one in which they live, inhabited by a different kind of man. In Acts 10:34–35 one finds Simon Peter saying, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." The point here is that the problems observed in the darkest corners of our society are human problems, not racial ones. The fault-line between civilization and barbarism runs down the middle of every human heart, and the grace of God remains available to provide a way out for all who would seek it. While we reject moral relativism, and so stand ready to judge between better and worse ways of living, we should strive to avoid self-righteousness. We certainly should eschew completely any notions of collective, racial condemnation or virtue.

Unfortunately, some conservatives now write about "the problem of black crime," about "the crisis of black illegitimacy," about "the threat of black social pathology." But what has race to do with these problems, per se? I am, of course, keenly aware that the rates of crime and illegitimacy among blacks are substantially higher than among whites. I am merely observing that neither the causes nor the cures of such maladies depend on one's skin color. Which group of Americans are innocent and which are the culprits in these affairs? These are problems of sin, not of skin. I would have thought that religious conservatives would be the ones objecting most strenuously and insistently to this lapse of social virtue on the right. Sadly, they have not been.

It is true that, in the recent history of American social policy, it was liberals who "played the race card" by arguing that the disadvantages of blacks justified race-based remedies. Some liberals even claimed that the self-esteem of black youngsters could not be secured without rewriting history so as to provide minorities with equal time. But, while these liberal efforts are largely discredited, we now find conservatives, with the political initiative in hand, acting to maintain and reinforce this inordinate focus on race.

Thus, when conservatives talk of the "culture of poverty" in reference to urban black communities they miss the deeper truth—that America's real problem is its reluctance to affirm those common moral standards that could guide the behavior of blacks and whites alike. Similarly, one conservative critic now declares victory over Afrocentrists by noting that the latter's search for a black Shakespeare has ended in failure. But surely the larger point is that such a search was unnecessary all along, because Shakespeare belongs every bit as much to the ghetto-dwelling black youngster as he does to the offspring of middle-class whites. Why are conservatives, who make so much of the importance of being "color-blind" in public policy, not the first to stress this point?

There is hypocrisy in this conservative stance. Though advocating race neutrality, conservatives do not treat blacks and whites as moral equals. Critics of affirmative action often invoke Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., who in 1963 said famously, "I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character." It is a corollary of this principle that, when gazing upon Americans who are welfare mothers, juvenile felons or the cognitively deficient, we should see human beings with problems, not races of people plagued by pathology. Yet, as I have argued, conservatives do not always do so.

Perhaps more significantly, this selective remembrance of Dr. King's moral leadership diminishes the challenge which his life, and death, should pose for all Americans. Two years before his most famous speech, in a commencement address at Lincoln University, Dr. King made a less well known reference to his dream for our nation:

"One of the first things we notice in this dream is an amazing universalism. It does not say some men [are created equal], but it says all men. It does not say all white men, but it says all men, which includes black men. . . . And there is another thing we see in this dream that ultimately distinguishes democracy and our form of government from all of the totalitarian regimes that emerge in history. It says that each individual has certain basic rights that are neither conferred by nor derived from the state. To discover where they come from, it is necessary to move back behind the dim mist of eternity, for they are God-given. Very seldom, if ever, in the history of the world has a sociopolitical document expressed in such profoundly eloquent and unequivocal language the dignity and the worth of the human personality. The American dream reminds us that every man is heir to the legacy of worthiness."

This too would be a worthy dream for conservatism: to insure that every American can lay claim to his most precious civic inheritance—a legacy of worthiness. To secure it, conservatives must learn not to look upon poor urban blacks as the Others—aliens apart from and a threat to our civilization. Instead, these Americans should be seen as inseparably interwoven constituents of the larger social fabric.

MESSAGE TO PRESIDENT CLINTON: END IMPASSE, BALANCE THE BUDGET

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday December 20, 1995

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member highly commends to his colleagues this editorial which appeared in the Omaha World-Herald on December 20, 1995:

[From the Omaha World-Herald, Dec. 20, 1995]

MESSAGE TO CLINTON GROWS LOUDER: END IMPASSE, BALANCE THE BUDGET

Wall Street may have accomplished something that the public—which, in opinion surveys, tilted toward President Clinton's position on a balanced budget—had failed to do. Traders and investors sent a strong message to Washington about the urgency of ending the impasse over a balanced budget.

The message came in the form of a decline in the value of stocks and bonds as the street expressed its concern over the collapse of budget negotiations between the White House and GOP congressional leaders. By the end of the day Monday, the White House was setting a new round of talks in motion.

For such indications of urgency have come from the general public. Clinton's approval rating has risen to a two-year high since he began characterizing the GOP budget as an act of cruelty against the poor, the sick and the elderly. Republicans, in effect, have been punished in the polls for trying to keep their 1994 campaign promise to balance the budget.

Not all Democrats, however, were buying the White House line. On the same day that Wall Street roared its disapproval of the impasse, a bipartisan group presented a position paper at a symposium in Minneapolis. The group included former office-holders Paul Tsongas, Richard Lamm, Gary Hart, Tim Penny, Lowell Weicker and John Anderson. All but Weicker and Anderson are Democrats.

Their statement included this "core principle": "We can no longer stay the course, spending more than we earn." They said, "We are maintaining our standard of living by borrowing from our children." They urged that the nation's leaders commit to a policy of economic stability, which means no inflation and no federal budget deficits "to soak up an already inadequate national savings pool."

Sacrifice will be necessary, they said. Among other things, Social Security and Medicare must be reformed to prepare them for the retirement of large numbers of baby boomers after the turn of the century. Clinton has described even the modest adjustments the Republicans have proposed as draconian. He simply must compromise on Medicare and Medicaid, bring himself to take the decisive actions that moderates in his own party are increasingly coming to consider necessary.

Another message was leveled at Washington Tuesday morning. In a "bipartisan appeal from business leaders," published as a newspaper advertisement and carrying the names of more than 90 business executives, Clinton and Congress were urged to remember that the health of the economy rests on the ability of the government to agree on a credible plan.

Among other things, the business leaders said, it's time to accept the economic projections from the Congressional Budget Office—projections that Clinton has opposed because they would allow less spending than the more optimistic White House figures. The bipartisan business leaders also said long-term entitlement spending should be "on the table" for reconsideration, as should any proposed tax cuts.

Little by little, Clinton's attempts to exploit the situation for political gain are being called to account by members of his own party. Something has been needed to neutralize his tacky insistence that the struggle has been between an enlightened, compassionate White House and an evil gang of GOP extremists. Some Democrats have helped set the record straight by adding their voices to bipartisan messages.

LEGISLATION DEPLORING HOLOCAUST DENIERS AND COMMENDING THE HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL MUSEUM, HOUSE RESOLUTION 316

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a resolution, House Resolution 316, on behalf of myself and my House colleagues on the Holocaust Memorial Museum Council, Mr. YATES, Mr. LATOURETTE, Mr. REGULA, and Mr. LANTOS, which deplores the persistent, ongoing, and malicious efforts by some persons in this country and abroad to deny the historical reality of the Holocaust, and which commends the vital, ongoing work of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum.

Yesterday, the House adopted legislation that will facilitate the museum's annual Days of Remembrance ceremony in the Rotunda on April 16, 1995. Yet, the work of the Holocaust Memorial Museum is conducted year-round, as evidenced by the larger than expected attendance at the museum, which is steadily increasing.

One of the reasons for the museum's existence is to counter Holocaust deniers. Those who promote the denial of the Holocaust do so either out of profound ignorance or for furthering anti-Semitism and racism. The Holocaust Memorial Museum, through its permanent exhibitions, traveling programs, and educational outreach efforts, both memorialize the victims of the Holocaust, and counters these accusers through its honest and sensitive approach to one of the most ferociously heinous state acts the world has ever known.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I request that the full text of the legislation be printed at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for my colleagues' review, and urge all Members of the House of Representatives to express their support for the work of the Holocaust Memorial Museum by cosponsoring this legislation, House Resolution 316.

H. RES. 316

Deploring individuals who deny the historical reality of the Holocaust and commending the vital, ongoing work of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum.

Whereas the Holocaust is a basic fact of history, the denial of which is no less absurd than the denial of the occurrence of the Second World War;

Whereas the Holocaust—the systematic, state-sponsored mass murders by Nazi Germany of 6,000,000 Jews, alongside millions of others, in the name of a perverse racial theory—stands as one of the most ferociously heinous state acts the world has ever known; and

Whereas those who promote the denial of the Holocaust do so out of profound ignorance or for the purpose of furthering anti-Semitism and racism: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) deplores the persistent, ongoing and malicious efforts by some persons in this country and abroad to deny the historical reality of the Holocaust; and

(2) commends the vital, ongoing work of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, which memorializes the victims of the Holocaust and teaches all who are willing to learn profoundly compelling and universally resonant moral lessons.

H.R. 1804, THE JUDGE ISAAC PARKER FEDERAL BUILDING

HON. Y. TIM HUTCHINSON

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, recently the House passed H.R. 1804, which would name the Federal building in Fort Smith, AR, after Judge Issac Parker.

While this legislation was overwhelmingly supported by 373 Members of the House, there were 40 Members who voted against H.R. 1804. It was subsequently reported that a number of Members who voted against the bill did so because they believed Judge Parker was a racist and one was even quoted as saying Parker "Hung blacks because they were black."

This past year our country faced the issue of race in ways it never had before. It is a sad and unfortunate fact that racism is alive and well in our society today. It is also a fact that racism knows no color or ethnic boundaries. People of all races are subject to their own prejudices. We must all fight to overcome our own personal prejudices and biases.

That is why I cannot allow the statements about Judge Parker to go unanswered. I think it is important for people to know the real Judge Parker and the man that he was. He was a man who was ahead of his time. He was a man who freely gave of himself to his community. He was a man who had a deep respect for the law and a deep concern for those who came before his court. His reputation is so respected that 100 years after his death the citizens of Fort Smith, AR still want to honor him and his legacy.

I would, therefore, bring to your attention letters which were sent to me from the Department of the Interior the day after the vote on H.R. 1804. One is from the superintendent of the Fort Smith National Historic Site and the other is a letter to the editor by the park historian. I hope this information is helpful to Members' understanding of the real Judge Parker.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
NATIONAL PARK SERVICE,
Fort Smith, AR, December 6, 1995.

Hon. TIM HUTCHINSON,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE HUTCHINSON: We have been following your efforts over the last few months to rename the Fort Smith federal building in honor of Judge Isaac C. Parker with great interest and support. I read the news article in this morning's paper and was surprised and disappointed to read the statements calling Judge Parker a racist and the unsubstantiated remarks that he hanged blacks "just because they were black". There is no historical record supporting these statements. In fact the record proves just the opposite. Our historian has written the attached letter to the editor to hopefully clarify the issue. She also received a call today from the AP service in Little Rock about this and she provided the same information to them. We are forwarding similar letters to Senators Bumpers and Pryor in the hopes that they will also support your efforts.

I am sorry that we did not offer you more substantial support earlier in the process. I was frankly surprised that there would be much protest. If we can provide you any further details or information please call on us. Thank you.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM N. BLACK,
Superintendent.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
NATIONAL PARK SERVICE,
Fort Smith, AR, December 6, 1995.

EDITOR,
Southwest Times Record,
Fort Smith, AR.

TO THE EDITOR: In response to criticism of Isaac C. Parker leveled by lawmakers opposing the House bill to name the federal courthouse in Fort Smith after the judge, I would like to make the following comments. The statement that Parker hanged African Americans "just because they were black" is simply not true. Of the 87 men who were executed on the Fort Smith gallows (79 of those while Parker was on the bench), 33 (38%) were white, 36 (41%) were Indian and 18 (21%) were black. Of those 18 African Americans, 17 were convicted of murder and one of rape in jury trials. Federal statute at that time ordered that anyone convicted of rape or murder was to receive the death penalty. Parker had no choice except to sentence these people to death.

Furthermore, Parker provided opportunities for African Americans that otherwise would not have been available. He appointed Bass Reeves the first African American deputy U.S. marshal west of the Mississippi in 1875. Other blacks served prominently on the deputy force throughout Parker's years in Fort Smith, including Grant Johnson, Zeke Miller, Robert Fortune, John Garrett and Bynum Colbert. Parker's personal bailiff while he was in Fort Smith was a former slave named George Winston. Other African Americans served on the staff of the federal jail at Fort Smith.

Nothing in the historical record supports the idea that Parker was a racist. The Ohio native, Union Civil War veteran and Congressman from Missouri used his position as a federal judge to empower African Americans. Yes, there were black men hanged on the gallows, but these were convicted criminals guilty of severe crimes. By the time they reach Parker's courtroom, there was little he could do but provide them a fair trial and then, if necessary, sentence them as the law provided.

Sincerely,

JULIET L. GALONSKA,
Park Historian.

AWARD-WINNING ENVIRONMENTAL CONSCIOUSNESS

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, one of the most important issues for the future of our Nation is the application of responsible environmental policy. Our natural resources are most precious, and cannot be replaced. Our policy decisions must be based upon careful deliberations sounded in credible, objective, and thorough information. I am proud to say that the Bay City Times has been tremendously successful in meeting this test with its award-winning series, "Cleaning our Troubled Waters".

Over an 8-day period last year, the Bay City Times carefully examined the facts surrounding the condition of the Saginaw Bay and Saginaw River. The State of Michigan had dedicated this waterway as the most contaminated body of water in the State. The people who live around the Saginaw Bay and River, and who depend upon it as a source of water, recreation, and commerce, deserved and needed accurate information, and they got it.

Nearly half of the editorial staff of the Times worked on this series over a 10-month period, carefully checking and rechecking information to provide as accurate a view of the situation as possible. Their hard work resulted in four major awards: the 1994 Associated Press Division 2 News Sweepstakes Award; 1st place in the 1994 AP Division 2 Public Service for News; Michigan United Conservation Club's Ben East Award; and 2d place for Local News Reporting from the Michigan Press Association.

Following an exhaustive review of environmental records, numerous site visits, extensive interviews, this series has enlightened many of us who truly care about how we preserve the Saginaw Water Basin, how we keep funding alive for the Saginaw Bay Watershed Initiative, and what each of us can do to be more aware of the impact that we have on our environment.

I want to offer my heartiest congratulations to the dedicated staff who worked on this series: Reporters Eric English, Kelly Adrian Frick, Tom Gilchrist, Greta Guest, Lydia Hodges, John Herbst, Jenni Laidman, and Amy Reyes; photographers Wes Stafford and Dick Van Nostrand; graphic artist Tammie Stimpfel; and editors Elizabeth Gunther, Pam Panchak and David Vizard. These people contributed to the work of a lifetime, and their efforts should have a major impact on public policy designed to safeguard the Saginaw Bay and River. I also want to compliment Bay City Times publisher Kevin Dykema and editor Paul Keep for having the foresight to devote this level of skilled resources to a project that could be very unpopular, but was, nonetheless, vital for the long-term environmental health of our area.

Mr. Speaker, in this instance a marvelous case was made to justify action to preserve a vital resource. All communities should be so lucky to have such a thorough and professional review of a vital resource. I urge you and all of our colleagues to join me in complimenting the Bay City Times and its award-winning staff for truly trying to help clean our troubled waters.

TRAVEL AND TOURISM PARTNERSHIP ACT

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Congressional Travel and Tourism Caucus, I ask all Members to support H.R. 2579.

Embodied in this bill are some of the boldest new ideas to ever come out of the private sector.

H.R. 2579 will strengthen U.S. tourism promotion efforts in a expanding and highly-competitive international market.

Our bill builds on the strength of the travel and tourism industry, rather than putting another item on the Federal Government's tab.

The 1,700 delegates to the White House Conference on Travel and Tourism have already endorsed our public-private partnership plan that does just that.

Some in Congress may ask why it is so critical that we focus on tourism, particularly tourism from abroad.

I can tell you in very clear terms—this is a $535 billion business.

But this year, we will have 2 million fewer visitors from abroad than 2 years ago.

What is 2 million visitors here or there?

That drop has cost us 177,000 jobs which should have gone to American workers.

H.R. 2579, the Travel and Tourism Partnership Act would change this.

Through partnering government with the resources and creative talents of the American tourism industry, we can recapture our share of the world market.

For future jobs and economic growth in your district, join me in supporting this ground breaking legislation.

COMMUNITY OF IMLAY CITY

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to the citizens of Imlay City, MI, as they celebrate the official opening of their new city office building.

In 1850 the Township of Imlay first was recognized by an act of the Michigan Legislature. As the area developed, it became apparent to the city officials that they must plan for the future, and therefore on April 14, 1872, Imlay City was incorporated. Since that time the population has grown from less than 500 to approximately 3,000 residents.

The first city office building was finished in 1904, the second was opened in 1975; this third facility is to be dedicated today, December 20, 1995. Planning for this facility has been long in the works with the many and growing needs of the community taken into account in order that this new building will serve for many years to come. As planning began, the city commission and city manager were particularly concerned and committed to making sure that the building would be accessible to all their residents and be in compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

I stand before my colleagues today to compliment all the citizens of Imlay City on the opening of their new city office building that is dedicated to serving the needs of all the residents.

TRIBUTE TO CONGRESSMAN JOHN DINGELL ON THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF HIS ELECTION TO CONGRESS

HON. ALAN B. MOLLOHAN

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join my colleagues in paying tribute to the dean of this House and a very good friend, Congressman JOHN D. DINGELL.

JOHN DINGELL is, without question, one of the most respected Members of this institution. And so it is highly appropriate that we gather to recognize his remarkable 40-year record of service and achievement.

When you look at that record, you have to marvel at Congressman DINGELL's sphere of influence, for it is far reaching.

Most Members of Congress, either through conscious choice or subconscious tendency, choose a level at which to focus their energies. For some, it is on national policies. For others, it is on local issues. It is rare to find a legislator who has the energy, the intellect, and the political savvy to do both.

JOHN DINGELL is just such a legislator, one who shapes national policies and works with great diligence for Michigan's 16th District.

I would invite you to first look at the national policy arena, where JOHN DINGELL has worked to better the lives of the American people through his powerful committee position.

He has been—and remains—an effective advocate of consumers and taxapayes, whose interests he vigilantly defends. He also has worked to help disabled Americans gain access that the rest of us sometimes take for granted. And his service has benefited all who value a healthy environment and the protection of rare lands and species.

Closer to home, well, the citizens of the 16th are hardworking people; people who understand and appreciate the value of a hardworking Representative. That's why, 20 times and by overwhelming margins, they've chosen JOHN DINGELL as their voice here in the Nation's Capital.

And he's a powerful voice for them. Congressman DINGELL works hard here to protect Michigan jobs and create new ones. He fights for working families, for veterans, for seniors, for students. He also has developed important environmental initiatives on local waterways.

Finally, I would like to point out that this House, too, benefits greatly from Mr. DINGELL's service. He is a man of integrity. Of course, he is also a tremendous source of institutional knowledge. And he is a master of House rules and procedures. I am honored to serve with him and count him as a personal friend.

Let me note again, Mr. Speaker, that it is a true pleasure to recognize the gentleman from Michigan and commemorate his four decades of distinguished service.

THANK YOU FOR THE GIFT FROM PETER NICHOLAS TO DUKE UNIVERSITY

HON. DAVID FUNDERBURK

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. FUNDERBURK. Mr. Speaker, my district is proud to be the home of Duke University, one of our Nation's finest institutions of higher education. On December 7, that university happily announced a gift of $20 million from the family of Peter M. Nicholas, a Massachusetts business executive and trustee of the university as well as the founder and president of Boston Scientific, a leading manufacturer of medical devices. His family's gift will support Duke University's School of the Environment, which the university has renamed in honor of the Nicholas family.

The Nicholas School of the Environment is unique among university programs dedicated to environmental research and education, in that it bases its approach to complex environmental problems in an interdisciplinary perspective. As a former academic myself, I know that a broad focus grounded in the insight and understanding of different scientific disciplines provides a powerful way of unraveling the most complicated problems. Other institutions tend to approach problems of the environment from either a scientific or public policy perspective, and advances in understanding our environment have certainly come from this traditional approach. But my constituents at Duke are excited about the potential that is offered by looking at environmental problems from an interdisciplinary perspective including natural sciences, public policy, economics, and management. I too share their optimism, and look forward to hearing of significant advances made at the Nicholas School of the Environment.

At the university's news conference announcing the gift, there were many comments made about the importance of the school's programs of research and education, and about the importance to all life on earth of understanding our environment better. However, when asked the reasons why his family had chosen to make this generous gift to support environmental research and education at Duke, Peter Nicholas stressed an important theme that echoes something many of us in public service have been saying.

"Government * * * can't do everything. What the government is trying to do is come to terms with what its role is with respect to the priorities of the country," Mr. Nicholas said.

Mr. Nicholas went on to note his belief that educational institutions have a responsibility to help understand issues, set priorities, "and then galvanize the resource that exists throughout society—industrial, academic, government and others—to in fact make a difference."

"I think we shouldn't misinterpret what our government is saying," Mr. Nicholas continued. "[I]t is clear that the government has a leadership role in terms of being sure that we understand what our priorities are, what the urgencies are, as it relates to the environment," he said. "It is also important that the ground rules and the incentives are in place at the federal level to ensure that behavior by all elements of our society is consistent with what everyone's goals are. But it is not clear that it is a central government role to fund the environment objectives that we have."

Mr. Nicholas' comments at Duke, and, more important, his family's gift of $20 million for the university's school of the environment, constitute a welcome signal that some leaders of the private sector understand and appreciate the value of the partnership by government, academia, and industry in problem solving. His words, and his family's personal investment in that effort, are thus worthy of note by this body, and I commend them to my colleagues in the House.

TRIBUTE TO DON FAUROT, UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI TIGERS FOOTBALL COACH

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to Don Faurot, a legendary figure in University of Missouri athletics, who died on October 19, 1995. He was 93.

Don Faurot, who coached the Tigers football team from 1935 through 1956, was credited with creating the split-T formation at Missouri in 1941.

He was 101–79–10 in his coaching career.

Coach Faurot's 1939 team won his first Big Six title and the Tigers' first trip to the Orange Bowl. As an 8-year-old boy, I was present in Miami, FL, when his M.U. team played Georgia Tech.

Missouri's football stadium is named for him.

Through the years, he had continued to attend every Missouri home game.

Coach Faurot, who set the cornerstone for the Missouri football program that exists today, was even more respected for the integrity he brought to the game.

"If everybody in collegiate athletics was a Don Faurot," Big Ten Commissioner Wayne Duke once said, "then collegiate athletics would be what it is supposed to be."

Don Faurot was born in Mountain Grove, MO, on June 23, 1902. Despite losing the first two fingers on his right hand in a boyhood farming accident, he was a 145-pound fullback at Missouri in 1923 and 1924, and played basketball and baseball.

He took over the football program at Missouri in 1935 after coaching 9 years at Kirksville State Teachers College, now Northeast Missouri State University. At Kirksville, his teams went 26–0 from 1923–32, the best small college record in the country.

When he returned to Missouri, he took over a team that had won just two games in 3 years and the athletic program was $500,000 in debt.

Under Faurot's direction, though, the Tigers won three conference titles and went to four bowl games. When he retired as athletic director in 1967, the program was in the black and the stadium's seating capacity had doubled to more than 50,000.

This despite rigorously adhering to recruiting policies and relying primarily on homegrown players.

"If you lose with home-state boys, that's bad," he said. "But if you lose with out-of-state boys, that's terrible. If you win with imported athletes, that's good. If you win with your own, that's great."

A member of football's National Hall of Fame and the Missouri Sports Hall of Fame, Faurot remained active in his later years as talent procurer and coach for the Blue-Gray game in Montgomery, AL, and as executive secretary of the Missouri Senior Golf Assocation.

In 1972, Coach Faurot received what probably ranked as his greatest personal honor when the Missouri football stadium was officially named Faurot Field.

In 1926, Don Faurot, an agricultural student at Missouri, helped lay sod for the field, then known as Memorial Stadium.

Coach Faurot is survived by his wife, Mary, of Columbia, three daughters, seven grandchildren, and a brother, Fred, of Columbia.

JUSTICE , COMMERCE, STATE APPROPRIATIONS

HON. SHEILA JACKSON-LEE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I arise today to express my great disappointment that this appropriation bill would replace the COPS programs, which have enjoyed such unequivocal support, with a law enforcement block grant. In my congressional district in Houston, TX, the COPS programs have placed 529 more officers on our streets. The COPS programs have played an integral part in reclaiming our neighborhoods.

Throughout the Nation, in the course of 1 year alone, the COPS programs have been a proven success and have enabled local law enforcement to hire or redeploy 25,933 new community policing officers, who will serve 80 percent of all Americans.

The COPS program has guaranteed more patrol police for our neighborhoods and cities, but the block grant which replaces the COPS program would jeopardize this guarantee and goes against the promise that the U.S. Congress made to the American people under the Violent Crime Control Act of 1994.

Community policing has been successful at meeting public safety needs. Having police officers on foot patrol fosters stronger bonds between community residents and police officers. This partnership is particularly important at a time when there are many heightened tensions between law enforcement officers and residents of inner-city neighborhoods. The National Organization of Black Law Enforcement [NOBLE] has supported community policing as the only hope to regain the trust and respect necessary to providing quality police service to our citizens in many of these neighborhoods.

Local law enforcement groups across the Nation have unequivocally endorsed the COPS programs. The majority of Americans also support community policing. In August 1995, the National Association of Police Organizations survey found that the American public overwhelmingly supports the COPS program over block grants to State and local governments for public safety use by 65 percent to 35 percent.

Community police patrols are an essential line of defense against crime. We need to maintain our national commitment to carry out our promise of safety and increased police manpower.

The public wants us to listen and not play politics with a program that is a proven success story. The COPS program has worked—keep it working to help prevent crime.

Additionally, as a member of the women's caucus I fought for dollars for the program fighting against violence against women. If we pass a clean continuing resolution we will keep that money.

A TRIBUTE TO JOHN BUTLER, T.L.C. MEDICAL SERVICES, INC.

HON. JAMES T. WALSH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives today to join me in paying special tribute to an industrious individual with a good heart. A constituent of mine who in addition to dedicating his life to a business which saves people's lives, has shown the ingenuity to rise above the hundreds who provide a similar service by coming up with an idea that helps drunk drivers help themselves back to respectability.

The man's name is David J. Butler of T.L.C. Medical Services, Inc., an ambulance service in Cortland, NY. Mr. Butler recently was honored by his peers in the American Ambulance Association when he won the Public Safety Program Award in a national competition.

Working in conjunction with the Cortland County district attorney and the county sheriff, Mr. Butler developed a program which allowed first-time DWI offenders who were not involved in a serious infraction connected with their offense to benefit from a plea bargain which required them to do community service.

The community service, as you might guess, was to ride with ambulance personnel to drinking-related calls so as to experience, while sober, the devastating effect alcohol can have on drivers and on domestic situations

The program is called Riding for Life. |t is to the credit of David J. Butler, who 22 years ago acquired his ambulance company and since then has shown what commitment means. He has increased the number of ambulances and other vehicles, and he still works very hard himself.

Mr. Butler is a civic leader in central New York. I am very proud to call him a neighbor and thank my colleagues for acknowledging his accomplishment.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. DEBORAH PRYCE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Ms. PRYCE. Mr. Speaker, due to inclement weather in my district, I was unavoidably detained and not able to vote earlier this week. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye" on rollcall No. 866, "aye" on rollcall No. 867, "aye" on rollcall No. 868, "no" on rollcall No. 869, and "aye" on rollcall No. 870.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH ROLF EKEUS OF UNSCOM

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, on November 1, 1995 I wrote to Mr. Rolf Ekeus, the Executive Chairman of the Office of the U.N. Special Commission [UNSCOM] in charge of weapons destruction and monitoring in Iraq. My basic question was: Why doesn't UNSCOM release the names of companies providing dual-use or military items to Iraq?

Mr. Ekeus' basic answer is that UNSCOM cannot carry out its weapons dismantlement tasks without the help of sovereign governments, sovereign governments—often because of ongoing legal cases—want to control the release of information about companies, and releasing the names of companies without the approval of sovereign governments will undermine the ability of UNSCOM to carry out its important mission.

I appreciate Mr. Ekeus' response, but I am still of the belief that sunshine is a powerful deterrent, and I will want to pursue this question further.

The text of the correspondence follows:

COMMITTEE ON INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS,
Washington, DC, November 1, 1995.

Hon. ROLF EKEUS
Chairman, U.N. Special Commission on Iraq, United Nations Headquarters, New York, N.Y.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I write with respect to the question of companies that supplied or are supplying dual-use goods, services or technology to Iraq, and the use of those dual-use items in Iraq's programs to build weapons of mass destruction.

At the time of the creation of UNSCOM by UN Security Council Resolution 687 in April, 1991, it had been my impression, from both you and from U.S. officials, that the names of companies supplying dual-use items to Iraq eventually would be made public. Thus far, to my knowledge, no such list has been made public.

I continue to think that it is important to make a list of all such companies public, on the theory that sunshine is the best deterrent of such transfers of dual-use items in the future.

I would like to ask a number of questions:

1. Why has a list of companies supplying dual-use items to Iraq not been made public?

When will a list of such companies be made public?

2. What is the policy of UNSCOM on the publication of such a list of companies?

Does UNSCOM set policy on disclosure of names of companies itself, or is it acting on instructions of the Security Council or members of the Security Council?

Is it the policy of UNSCOM to defer to individual governments on the publication of such information? If so, why?

3. Do you agree that the publication of such a list of companies would serve as an important deterrent on future dealings with Iraq in dual-use items?

What steps can be taken to bring about the publication of such a list?

What additional steps can be taken to deter future transfers of dual-use items to Iraq?

Thank you for your time and attention, and I look forward to your early reply.

With best regards,
Sincerely,
LEE H. HAMILTON,
Ranking Democratic Member.

UNITED NATIONS
SPECIAL COMMISSION,
December 14, 1995.

Hon. LEE H. HAMILTON,
Ranking Democratic Member, Committee on International Relations; House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN HAMILTON: Thank you for your letter of 1 November 1995. I appreciate your letting me know of your concerns and inviting me to give my response. I regret the delay in this letter, but I was away from the United States much of November, principally in the Gulf region.

Your personal attention to our mission is highly appreciated and important as Iraq's insistent efforts in retaining and reacquiring weapons of mass destruction is and should remain of public concern.

Given the importance of foreign acquisition for Iraq's WMD programmes, the Special Commission gives priority to the task of securing as much information as possible on foreign suppliers to Iraq. It is especially important to map out Iraq's supplier network. In this respect, UNSCOM has so far been quite successful, thanks very much to the support from governments of those States from which supplier companies have been operating. Each case of export to Iraq of prohibited or dual-use items has to be carefully explored and investigated. Access to the companies concerned is crucial for the indepth investigation. To get such access, UNSCOM has in practice to get the approval of the government concerned. Otherwise, governments would, no doubt, be upset were UNSCOM to initiate investigations without consent on their national territory. Our experience is that governments are cautious in providing access, and that without government support to the Commission's investigations, companies are at liberty to refuse talking to our experts. Over time, the Special Commission has learnt that a primary concern of governments appears to be the question of confidentiality. This requirement is applied almost on a universal basis. It means that if data like the name and identity of a company, and of the country of a supplier could be suspected to be published, the government would refuse access for investigation of the company concerned. Without government pressure, the supplier company would tend to be even more uncooperative. Thus, publication of data on supplier companies would have a devastating effect on the continuous and future efforts by the Special Commission to effectively block Iraq from retaining or reacquiring proscribed weapons.

These explanations should serve to set the background to the answer to your first question, namely that at the present, it is not advisable for the Special Commission to make public the names of foreign suppliers.

Concerning the policy of the Special Commission on the publication of names of suppliers, I can state that the data on suppliers are kept safely within the Headquarters in New York. Information concerning a supplier is, as a matter of policy, shared with the government of the supplier-country, with requests for further information (through interviews with visits and/or interrogation) of the company concerned.

This policy was originally formulated by the Special Commission and presented in briefings to the Security Council. A strong and vigorous support for the policy so defined has been the answer to these briefings.

I agree that the publication of a list on the names of supplier companies could serve as a deterrent on future dealings with Iraq in dual-use items. But such a publication would at the same time bring an end to practically all efforts of the Special Commission to get indispensable support and intelligence from the governments and information from the named companies. That would seriously compromise the task of the Special Commission to identify and eliminate all proscribed weapons in Iraq.

When our policy was originated, it was considered that publication of a list of names of companies could lead to certain presumptions which might very well be unjustified. Prior to the Gulf War, there was no ban on many of the dual-use items and chemicals exported to Iraq. Furthermore, Iraq frequently used agents and front companies to purchase items which were banned or controlled under certain multilateral export control systems, and resorted to false declarations as to destination and end-user. The supplier company, in such circumstances, could have been completely ignorant of the ultimate destination of the items concerned. It is because of these difficulties that the Special Commission reports the name of a company, which it identifies as the source of now proscribed items or materials in Iraq, only to the government in which that company is established. The government then, in most cases, assists in the investigation of the circumstances, of the export concerned and, where those circumstances so justify, undertakes prosecution of the offender. The Special Commission can support such prosecution through the supply of evidence in its possession and, in certain circumstances, through the provision of expert witnesses. Prosecution of a company, which is necessarily public, is surely the most powerful deterrent in convincing other companies not to engage in illegal trade. The Special Commission has every reason to believe that its policy has led to its gaining a much wider knowledge of Iraq's procurement networks, and the names of many more suppliers, than would otherwise have been the case. The cooperation with governments which has been obtained, and national prosecutions which have or are taking place, testify to the effectiveness of the policy. A complete understanding of Iraq's supplier networks is the most potent instrument in preventing the reactivation of these networks. The Special Commission already has evidence of certain attempts by Iraq to do so and has been able to prevent the export or to interdict the items concerned on their way to, or upon their arrival in Iraq.

In addition to measures already taken, especially those under the plans approved by the Security Council, the most effective step to deter future transfers to Iraq of dual-use items would be the early adoption by the Security Council of a resolution approving the mechanism for export/import control of Iraq designed by UNSCOM and the IAEA. Under the mechanism, all states would be obliged to notify UNSCOM and the IAEA of intended exports (including transshipment) to Iraq of such items. The proposed mechanism has just been transmitted to the Security Council where we hope for very early action.

I would be happy to meet with you on one of my visits to Washington to explain this matter further to you if you consider this would be useful. One of your staff could telephone my office at (212) 963-3018 to make arrangements.

Yours sincerely,
ROLF EKEUS,
Executive Chairman,
Office of the Special Commission.

HONORING MAYOR ROBERT ROSEGARTEN

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join with my constituents and the members of the Great Neck Lawyers Association as they meet to present Robert Rosegarten, mayor of the village of Great Neck Plaza with their most prestigious Community Service Award.

While maintaining an active business enterprise, Mayor Robert Rosegarten established a model of civic responsibility and participation that served to enhance the lives of all the citizens of Great Neck. He has received both State and national acclaim for developing the economic revitalization programs in the downtown shopping region of Great Neck Plaza and for his work to enhance the beautification of Great Neck Plaza. He has served as mayor of the village of Great Neck Plaza since 1992, and as its deputy mayor for 8 years. Under his leadership, the village of Great Neck Plaza has emerged as an effective municipal government with many of its programs being replicated throughout New York State.

In his role of enhancing the village of Great Neck Plaza, Mayor Rosegarten has shared his many talents with a wide array of community organizations providing both leadership and creativity in addressing community concerns. Among his many community roles, Mayor Rosegarten serves as president of the Great Neck Village Officials Organization, commissioner of the Great Neck Central Police Auxiliary, and board member of Great Neck's United Community Fund, Chamber of Commerce, and the Great Neck Arts Center. In addition, he is the vice-president of the Great Neck Plaza Management Council and director of the Water Authority of Great Neck North. In 1988, Mayor Rosegarten received the Great Neck United Community Fund's prestigious Leo M. Friend Award for community service.

Mayor Rosegarten's guiding tenet in public service has been to make a positive difference in the lives of his village's citizens. In that undertaking, he has dramatically succeeded. I am most proud to join with so many in honoring him.

THE REPUBLICANS' ATTEMPT TO DISGUISE THE PRESIDENT'S PROPOSAL

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in recognition of the Republicans' attempt to draw attention away from their life threatening budget, by attacking the President's budget proposal, are trying to disguise his proposal as a legislative measure. The President continues to be upfront with the Republicans. He has openly voiced his commitment to protecting Medicare, Medicaid, education, and the environment. And, the President has openly warned the GOP that he will veto measures which threaten the quality of life of the American people.

Yet, for some reason, our Republican colleagues just don't get it. What does it take for them to realize that they cannot hide from their budget massacre. The GOP budget will adversely affect the lives of millions of children, seniors, the disabled, veterans, and families across the country.

No matter how many times the Republicans show that they can pass a measure that will devastate the lives of the American people for generations to come—still does not make it right. As we gather here now, to vote on the Republicans' spin on the President's budget, the GOP is attempting to take the American people through another smoke and mirror budget maze.

Mr. Speaker, we do not have time for more of the GOP's pranks. The time the Republicans are wasting here today should be being invested in completing action on the rest of the appropriations bills that are needed to reopen the Federal Government. If the Republican budget could stand on its own merit, the GOP would not have to resort to extremist tactics like we see here today. This action, coupled with the Republicans' politically staged shutdown of the Federal Government, to avoid real debate and serious negotiations on their budget, is not only ridiculous, it is in fact irresponsible.

The American people must be asking themselves, when will the Republicans stop playing games with our lives: When will the Republicans take the needs of the American people seriously? And, most important, are the Republicans capable of negotiating, and passing a budget that is compassionate to children, seniors, the disabled, veterans, and hard-working families?

Mr. Speaker, so far the Republicans' positive response to these critical questions remains to be seen. I urge my colleagues to put an end to the Republicans' pranks, and to strongly urge our Republican colleagues to negotiate a compassionate budget. The American people deserve nothing less.

RETIREMENT OF JOHN M. COLLINS FROM THE CONGRESSIONAL RESEARCH SERVICE

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute a distinguished servant of the Congress and the Nation in the area of national defense and national security. On Wednesday, January 3, 1996, John M. Collins will retire after 22½ years as the Senior Specialist in National Defense of the Congressional Research Service, Library of Congress. Since 1972, Mr. Collins has provided authoritative, in-depth, and profound analysis and advice to the Congress on a range of national defense issues unparalleled in its breadth and scope.

Mr. Collins' retirement closes a lifetime of Government service which mirrors the tumultuous history of the past 50-odd years. A native, I am proud to say, of my State of Missouri, he began his public service with his enlistment in the U.S. Army in May 1942—after being rejected by the Marine Corps, a fact he reiterates with great delight and good humor to numerous marines and friends over the years. As a young enlisted soldier he came ashore over the Normandy beaches a few days after D-day, in 1944. As a captain he served in the Korean war. As a colonel he served as Chief of the Campaign Planning Group in General Westmoreland's headquarters in Vietnam during 1967–68—managing to get involved in, and survive as the winner, a point-blank shootout with a North Vietnamese soldier in the ruins of Hue City in early 1968.

In between these wartime duties he served in intelligence and contingency planning posts in Japan and the Middle East; training assignments in the United States; commanded a battalion in the 82d Airborne Division; was one of the principal planners for the possible invasion of Cuba which, fortunately, never had to take place during the fateful days of the Cuban missile crisis in October–November 1962; and graduated from the Industrial College of the Armed Forces. He closed his 30-year Army career as a faculty member and chief of the strategic studies group at the National War College during 1968–72.

Immediately upon retirement from the Army, Colonel Collins joined the Congressional Research Service as Senior Specialist in National Defense. From the beginning of his CRS career he showed a willingness to examine fundamental assumptions. One of his first CRS reports examined whether the strategic nuclear triad of bombers, ground-based ICBM's, and submarine-launched ballistic missiles had been arrived at rationally, and whether it was in fact the only possible method of constructing U.S. strategic nuclear forces. At the height of the first Arab oil embargo, in 1975, he and a CRS coauthor, Clyde Mark, poured cold water on the idea that seizing Arab oil fields by military force would be an easy task. He wrote a book-length examination of overall U.S. defense planning processes, and how they might be improved.

John Collins' single greatest service to the Congress and the Nation, however, was provided in the form of a series of book-length reports, beginning in 1976 and running through 1985, which meticulously documented the relentless military buildup and geostrategic expansion of the Soviet Union and its client states in almost every category of military power and area of the world. His comparisons of United States-Soviet military forces, together with the respective allies of both countries, demonstrated with clarity and precision how American military capabilities, relative to our interests, were steadily declining, and those of the Soviet Union were increasing. Widely read, quoted, and debated, John Collins' works on the United States-Soviet military balance unquestionably played a role in persuading the American people and their elected representatives that, by the early 1980's, major increases in United States military forces and defense spending were required to restore our national credibility and deter and prevent Soviet expansionism. This was not an easy time for John Collins. Some were not happy with what he had to say about the shifting balance of military power in favor of the Soviet Union, and he had to withstand considerable bureaucratic and political pressure to continue to do his job. However, those who exerted such pressure against him are gone. He and his works remain.

By helping alert the country to the growing menace of Soviet military power in the late 1970's and early 1980's, Mr. Collins also said to have played a role in the ultimate demise of the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact. Without the American military resurgence of the 1980's, it is difficult to see how the Soviet military-political juggernaut of the mid and late 1970's could have been halted, turned inward, and forced to collapse of its own internal strains. Indeed, in October 1985, only a few months after Gorbachev assumed power in the Soviet Union, he presciently suggested that "the whole Soviet security apparatus in Central Europe is coming unraveled."[1]

The thawing of the cold war and the eventual demise of the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact in no way lessened Mr. Collins' output. He produced authoritative studies of military space forces, United States and Soviet special operations forces, lessons learned from America's small wars, and a host of other reports and analyses. During the Persian Gulf war, he was frequently interviewed on national and international radio and television, and wrote numerous short analyses of possible issues and problems related to war with Iraq. At one point, well over a hundred congressional staffers gathered to listen with rapt attention to this veteran of three wars outline not the possible nature of a ground war with Iraq—not just in academic, and analytical terms, but how ground combat was "close up, and personal, and dirty." Within the past few years, his talents have turned to as diverse a set of subjects as counterproliferation, U.S. prepositioned military equipment, nonlethal weapons, and criteria for U.S. military intervention overseas. His last CRS report, finished just days ago, deals with the military aspects of NATO enlargement.

[1] Collins, John M. What Have We Got for $1 Trillion? The Washington Quarterly, Spring 1986: 49, based on testimony before the Defense Policy Panel, House Armed Services Committee, October 9, 1985.

Mr. Speaker, although John Collins is completing almost 54 years of total Federal service when he retires from CRS, he has no intention of remaining inactive. General Shalikashvili, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has had the eminent good sense to agree to provide Mr. Collins with some office and study space at the National Defense University at Fort McNair. With the time he now will have, plus the assistance from DOD, Mr. Collins intends to write books on military geography and military strategy. He will have more time to spend with his wife Gloria, to whom he has dedicated many of his books; his son Sean, holder of a doctorate in aeronautical and astronautical engineering from MIT, and a contributor to national defense and security in his own right in the field of ballistic missile defense; and his grandchildren.

Few people have devoted so much of a long life to the service of the United States as has John Collins. I wish him well as he enters yet another stage of that service.

OPPOSES SECURITIES LITIGATION CONFERENCE REPORT VETO OVERRIDE

HON. PETER A. DeFAZIO

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. DE FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I strongly oppose the motion to override the President's veto of the Securities Litigation Conference Report.

The laws governing securities litigation can certainly stand to be improved, but the language of this conference report does much more harm than good. This legislation—written by and for the large securities firms—is antismall investor and antiworking family.

The conference report reduces consumers protection. An investors ability and right to sue unscrupulous securities firms should not be stifled or circumscribed by Congress. For example, the language includes a sweeping loser pays provision that will make it extremely difficult for anyone without a multimillion dollar trust fund to challenge a large corporation in court.

Supporters of this legislation claim that there is an explosion of frivolous suits. The fact is that the number of securities class action suits has shrunk over the past 20 years. During the last several years, suits have been filed against only 120 companies annually—out of over 14,000 public corporations reporting to the SEC.

The President was correct in his veto. This conference report goes against the interests of working people and small investors. I sincerely hope that the Congress will sustain the veto that we can then enact true reform of our Nation's securities litigation laws.

OPPORTUNITIES TO CHANGE

HON. SUSAN MOLINARI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Ms. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the December 8, 1995, editorial from one of my local papers, the New York Post, which sums up exactly a sentiment most of us, I think, feel about Newt Gingrich. In these times of overt partisanship, the editors write that they,

> [H]ope that Gingrich takes heart, stands his ground and stays the course. Opportunities to change the direction in American politics don't come around often; and if the Republicans don't succeed in disrupting business as usual in Washington now, the chance will likely pass.

We have no choice, for the sake of our children, but to balance the budget and I urge Speaker GINGRICH to continue his effort to focus this Nation into realizing fiscal sanity.

[From the New York Post, Dec. 8, 1995]

THE GINGRICH INQUISITION

House Minority Leader David Bonior (D-Mich.) and other congressional Democrats have been trying for more than half a decade to pin ethics violations on Speaker Newt Gingrich. To this end, they and their allies in the land of the left leveled endless charges against Gingrich. Indeed, over the course of the last 15 months, the House Ethics Committee has considered 65 separate counts.

On Wednesday, the committee ruled that with respect to 64, the speaker has been completely or partially exonerated. (It should be noted that one of these charges turned on Gingrich's book contract with HarperCollins, a publishing concern owned by News Corp., which is also this newspaper's corporate parent.)

Only one of the 65 charges was deemed worthy of further exploration by an independent counsel. Pardon us if we suggest that this six-year fishing expedition has produced decidedly unimpressive results.

The committee voted to retain a special counsel to explore whether or not the speaker violated the law by using tax-deductible contributions to finance a college course he taught at Kennesaw State University in Georgia. Gingrich has expressed confidence that he will be fully exonerated on this seemingly narrow and highly technical charge. In light of the fate of all the other accusations lodged against him, it's hard not to credit this possibility. Many critics on both sides of aisle have contended that, in general, the standards for appointing independent counsels are exceedingly low; the Ethics Committee's decision here would seem to confirm this observation.

It is worth recognizing a distinction between the ethics problems allegedly swirling around Gingrich and those that brought down ex-House Speaker Jim Wright, a Democrat. The latter came under investigation after years of abusing his power. While Gingrich (as a back-bencher) played a leading role in the campaign against Wright, even loyal Democrats—in the end—couldn't ignore the ex-speaker's transgressions.

House Democrats, by contrast, have tried to demonize Gingrich ever since his success in that effort. And from the day the Georgia Republican became speaker, the "get Newt" campaign has been a central concern of the official Democratic party leadership.

Such prejudgment suggests that what bothers Bonior & Co. about Gingrich has nothing to do with whether or not tax-deductible contributions were mistakenly used to help finance his political science lectures at Kennesaw State. The Democrats object to the fact that Gingrich—the most able parliamentarian in recent memory—is an energetic conservative who's mounted a serious challenge to the national ideological status quo.

Similarly, it is not the mere existence of the speaker's political action committee, GOPAC, that disturbs the Democrats (though they are, in fact, urging the special counsel to expand his inquiry to include some of GOPAC's activities). What really distresses the Democratic leadership is the fact that Gingrich has used GOPAC to forge a spirited GOP congressional majority that's serious about welfare reform, tax reduction and shrinking the power of the federal government.

To a considerable extent, the Ethics Committee's willingness to order just one charge probed vindicates the speaker. We hope, therefore, that Gingrich takes heart, stands his ground and stays the course. Opportunities to change the direction in American politics don't come around often; and if the Republicans don't succeed in disrupting business as usual in Washington now, the chance will likely pass.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 134 MAKING FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1996

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, December 20, 1995

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.J. Res. 134, a measure that will provide the payment of compensation and pension benefits for our Nation's veterans and their families for fiscal year 1996. I am glad to see that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle are at least concerned about some aspect of their obligation to these patriots who answered the call of their Nation.

Despite the fact that this resolution has a noble objective, it is clearly incomplete. It simply does not go far enough. While our veterans and their families will be somewhat comforted by the passage of this resolution, who will give some financial assurance to the millions of Americans who continue to face uncertain futures because Congress has not fulfilled its obligations regarding the remaining appropriations bills? These remaining bills, which are not included in this resolution, are so harmful and unreasonable that the President has had to veto them and no action has been taken by the House to improve them or continue them in a continuing resolution.

Take for example, the Labor-HHS-Education appropriations bill. Action on this measure is still pending. While the Department of Health and Human Services is closed, Medicare and Medicaid applications cannot be processed. While the Department of Labor is closed, unemployment applications cannot be processed.

In addition, the drastic cuts in the appropriations measure for the Department of Education will deny critical resources to schools and communities across the country. The $1.1 billion cut in title 1 will deny over one million children the basic assistance they need in math and reading. The 50 percent cut in safe and drug free schools will take away the resources necessary to provide children a safe, crime free, and violence free classroom in which to attend school.

While we take these steps to assist our veterans, the threat to our environment continues to intensify. Because the VA-HUD-and Independent Agencies appropriations bill is not completed, environmental protection and oversight has come to a screeching halt. There is no enforcement of the Nation's environmental laws—laws that protect our water and air. Polluters are going unchecked everyday that the EPA is closed. Furthermore, the level of cuts proposed for EPA in the FY96 appropriations bill deprives our children of clean and safe environment.

Mr. Speaker, the list of vital programs that enhance the quality of life for all Americans is far greater than just that of veterans compensation and pension programs. What we are doing for America's veterans tonight is the right thing to do. We should do the right thing for all Americans and pass a clean continuing resolution.

TITLE I—BLOCK GRANTS FOR TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE FOR NEEDY FAMILIES

SEC. 101. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Marriage is the foundation of a successful society.

(2) Marriage is an essential institution of a successful society which promotes the interests of children.

(3) Promotion of responsible fatherhood and motherhood is integral to successful child rearing and the well-being of children.

(4) In 1992, only 54 percent of single-parent families with children had a child support order established and, of that 54 percent, only about one-half received the full amount due. Of the cases enforced through the public child support enforcement system, only 18 percent of the caseload has a collection.

(5) The number of individuals receiving aid to families with dependent children (in this section referred to as "AFDC") has more than tripled since 1965. More than two-thirds of these recipients are children. Eighty-nine percent of children receiving AFDC benefits now live in homes in which no father is present.

(A)(i) The average monthly number of children receiving AFDC benefits—

(I) was 3,300,000 in 1965;

(II) was 6,200,000 in 1970;

(III) was 7,400,000 in 1980; and

(IV) was 9,300,000 in 1992.

(ii) While the number of children receiving AFDC benefits increased nearly threefold between 1965 and 1992, the total number of children in the United States aged 0 to 18 has declined by 5.5 percent.

(B) The Department of Health and Human Services has estimated that 12,000,000 children will receive AFDC benefits within 10 years.

(C) The increase in the number of children receiving public assistance is closely related to the increase in births to unmarried women. Between 1970 and 1991, the percentage of live births to unmarried women increased nearly threefold, from 10.7 percent to 29.5 percent.

(6) The increase of out-of-wedlock pregnancies and births is well documented as follows:

(A) It is estimated that the rate of nonmarital teen pregnancy rose 23 percent from 54 pregnancies per 1,000 unmarried teenagers in 1976 to 66.7 pregnancies in 1991. The overall rate of nonmarital pregnancy rose 14 percent from 90.8 pregnancies per 1,000 unmarried women in 1980 to 103 in both 1991 and 1992. In contrast, the overall pregnancy rate for married couples decreased 7.3 percent between 1980 and 1991, from 126.9 pregnancies per 1,000 married women in 1980 to 117.6 pregnancies in 1991.

(B) The total of all out-of-wedlock births between 1970 and 1991 has risen from 10.7 percent to 29.5 percent and if the current trend continues, 50 percent of all births by the year 2015 will be out-of-wedlock.

(7) The negative consequences of an out-of-wedlock birth on the mother, the child, the family, and society are well documented as follows:

(A) Young women 17 and under who give birth outside of marriage are more likely to go on public assistance and to spend more years on welfare once enrolled. These combined effects of "younger and longer" increase total AFDC costs per household by 25 percent to 30 percent for 17-year olds.

(B) Children born out-of-wedlock have a substantially higher risk of being born at a very low or moderately low birth weight.

(C) Children born out-of-wedlock are more likely to experience low verbal cognitive attainment, as well as more child abuse, and neglect.

(D) Children born out-of-wedlock were more likely to have lower cognitive scores, lower educational aspirations, and a greater likelihood of becoming teenage parents themselves.

(E) Being born out-of-wedlock significantly reduces the chances of the child growing up to have an intact marriage.

(F) Children born out-of-wedlock are 3 times more likely to be on welfare when they grow up.

(8) Currently 35 percent of children in single-parent homes were born out-of-wedlock, nearly the same percentage as that of children in single-parent homes whose parents are divorced (37 percent). While many parents find themselves, through divorce or tragic circumstances beyond their control, facing the difficult task of raising children alone, nevertheless, the negative consequences of raising children in single-parent homes are well documented as follows:

(A) Only 9 percent of married-couple families with children under 18 years of age have income below the national poverty level. In contrast, 46 percent of female-headed households with children under 18 years of age are below the national poverty level.

(B) Among single-parent families, nearly ½ of the mothers who never married received AFDC while only ⅕ of divorced mothers received AFDC.

(C) Children born into families receiving welfare assistance are 3 times more likely to be on welfare when they reach adulthood than children not born into families receiving welfare.

(D) Mothers under 20 years of age are at the greatest risk of bearing low-birth-weight babies.

(E) The younger the single parent mother, the less likely she is to finish high school.

(F) Young women who have children before finishing high school are more likely to receive welfare assistance for a longer period of time.

(G) Between 1985 and 1990, the public cost of births to teenage mothers under the aid to families with dependent children program, the food stamp program, and the medicaid program has been estimated at $120,000,000,000.

(H) The absence of a father in the life of a child has a negative effect on school performance and peer adjustment.

(I) Children of teenage single parents have lower cognitive scores, lower educational aspirations, and a greater likelihood of becoming teenage parents themselves.

(J) Children of single-parent homes are 3 times more likely to fail and repeat a year in grade school than are children from intact 2-parent families.

(K) Children from single-parent homes are almost 4 times more likely to be expelled or suspended from school.

(L) Neighborhoods with larger percentages of youth aged 12 through 20 and areas with higher percentages of single-parent households have higher rates of violent crime.

(M) Of those youth held for criminal offenses within the State juvenile justice system, only 29.8 percent lived primarily in a home with both parents. In contrast to these incarcerated youth, 73.9 percent of the 62,800,000 children in the Nation's resident population were living with both parents.

(9) Therefore, in light of this demonstration of the crisis in our Nation, it is the sense of the Congress that prevention of out-of-wedlock pregnancy and reduction in out-of-wedlock birth are very important Government interests and the policy contained in part A of title IV of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 103 of this Act) is intended to address the crisis.

SEC. 102. REFERENCE TO SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.

Except as otherwise specifically provided, wherever in this title an amendment is expressed in terms of an amendment to or repeal of a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to that section or other provision of the Social Security Act.

TITLE IV—RESTRICTING WELFARE AND PUBLIC BENEFITS FOR ALIENS

SEC. 400. STATEMENTS OF NATIONAL POLICY CONCERNING WELFARE AND IMMIGRATION.

The Congress makes the following statements concerning national policy with respect to welfare and immigration:

(1) Self-sufficiency has been a basic principle of United States immigration law since this country's earliest immigration statutes.

(2) It continues to be the immigration policy of the United States that—

(A) aliens within the nation's borders not depend on public resources to meet their needs, but rather rely on their own capabilities and the resources of their families, their sponsors, and private organizations, and

(B) the availability of public benefits not constitute an incentive for immigration to the United States.

(3) Despite the principle of self-sufficiency, aliens have been applying for and receiving public benefits from Federal, State, and local governments at increasing rates.

(4) Current eligibility rules for public assistance and unenforceable financial support agreements have proved wholly incapable of assuring that individual aliens not burden the public benefits system.

(5) It is a compelling government interest to enact new rules for eligibility and sponsorship agreements in order to assure that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy.

(6) It is a compelling government interest to remove the incentive for illegal immigration provided by the availability of public benefits.

(7) With respect to the State authority to make determinations concerning the eligibility of qualified aliens for public benefits in this title, a State that chooses to follow the Federal classification in determining the eligibility of such aliens for public assistance shall be considered to have chosen the least restrictive means available for achieving the compelling governmental interest of assuring that aliens be self-reliant in accordance with national immigration policy.

“(A) that there exists with respect to the child a specific factor or condition such as the child's ethnic background, age, or membership in a minority or sibling group, or the presence of factors such as medical conditions or physical, mental, or emotional handicaps because of which it is reasonable to conclude that such child cannot be placed with adoptive parents without providing adoption assistance under this part or medical assistance under title XIX or XXI; and

“(B) that, except where it would be against the best interests of the child because of such factors as the existence of significant emotional ties with prospective adoptive parents while in the care of such parents as a foster child, a reasonable, but unsuccessful, effort has been made to place the child with appropriate adoptive parents without providing adoption assistance under this section or medical assistance under title XIX or XXI.

(1) Federal tax incentives that expand access to capital, increase the formation and expansion of small businesses, and promote commercial revitalization;

(2) Regulatory reforms that allow localities to petition Federal agencies, subject to the relevant agencies' approval, for waivers or modifications of regulations to improve job creation, small business formation and expansion, community development, or economic revitalization objectives of the enterprise zones;

(3) Home ownership incentives and grants to encourage resident management of public housing and home ownership of public housing;

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4) to restore the American family, reduce illegitimacy, control welfare spending and reduce welfare dependence, submit the following joint statement to the House and Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the text of the bill struck all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment that is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clerical changes.

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment as follows: The personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1995.

2. OBJECTIVES

House bill

To restore the American family, reduce illegitimacy, control welfare spending and reduce welfare dependence.

Senate amendment

To enhance support and work opportunities for families with children, reduce welfare dependence, and control welfare spending.

Conference agreement

3. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS ON FAMILIES (SECTION 101)

Present law

To provision.

House bill

It is the sense of the Congress that marriage is the foundation of a successful society, and an essential social institution which promotes the interests of children and society at large. The negative consequences of an out-of-wedlock birth on the child, the mother, and society are well documented. Yet the nation suffers unprecedented and growing levels of illegitimacy. In light of this crisis, the reduction of out-of-wedlock births is an important government interest and the policy contained in provisions of this title address the crisis.

Senate amendment

Congress finds that marriage is the foundation of a successful society and an essential institution that promotes the interests of children. Promotion of responsible fatherhood and motherhood is integral to successful child-rearing and well-being of children. It is the sense of Congress that prevention of out-of-wedlock pregnancy and reduction in out-of-wedlock birth are very important government interests and that the policy contained in provisions of this title is intended to address the crisis.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

4. REFERENCE TO SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

Except as otherwise specifically provided, wherever in this title an amendment is expressed in terms of an amendment to or repeal of a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to that section or other provision of the Social Security Act.

5. GRANTS TO STATES FOR NEEDY FAMILIES
(SECTION 103)

A. Purpose

Present law

Title IV–A, which provides grants to States for aid and services to needy families with children (AFDC), is designed to encourage care of dependent children in their own homes by enabling States to provide cash aid and services, maintain and strengthen family life, and help parents attain maximum self-support consistent with maintaining parental care and protection.

House bill

Block grants for temporary assistance for needy families (Title IV–A) are established to increase the flexibility of States in operating a program designed to:

(1) provide assistance to needy families so that children may be cared for in their homes or in the homes of relatives;

(2) end the dependence of needy parents on government benefits by promoting work and marriage; and

(3) discourage out-of-wedlock births.

Senate amendment

Block grants for temporary assistance for needy families (Title IV–A) are established to increase the flexibility of States in operating a program designed to:

(1) provide assistance to needy families with minor children;

(2) provide job preparation and opportunities for such families; and

(3) prevent and reduce the incidence of out-of-wedlock pregnancies, with a special emphasis on teen pregnancies, and establish annual goals for preventing and reducing these pregnancies for fiscal years 1996 through 2000.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment to read as follows:

Block grants for temporary assistance for needy families (Title IV–A) are established to increase the flexibility of States in operating a program designed to:

(1) provide assistance to needy families so that children may be cared for in their own homes or in the homes of relatives;

(2) end the dependence of needy parents on government benefits by promoting job preparation, work, and marriage;

(3) prevent and reduce the incidence of out-of-wedlock pregnancies and establish annual numerical goals for preventing and reducing the incidence of these pregnancies; and

(4) encourage the formation and maintenance of two-parent families.

B. Eligible States; State Plan

Present law

A State must have an approved State plan for aid and services to needy families containing 43 provisions, ranging from single-agency administration to overpayment recovery rules. State plans explain the aid and services that are offered by the State. Aid is defined as money payments. For most parents without a child under age 3, States must provide education, work, or training under the JOBS program to help needy families with children avoid long-term welfare dependence. To receive Federal funds, States must share in program costs. The Federal share of costs (matching rate) varies among States and is inversely related to the square of State per capita income. For AFDC benefits and child care, the Medicaid matching rate is used. This rate now ranges from 50 percent to 79 percent among States and averages about 55 percent. For JOBS activities, the rate averages 60 percent; for administrative costs, 50 percent. In FY 1995, 20 percent of employable (nonexempt) adult recipients must participate in education, work, or training under JOBS, and at least one parent in 50 percent of unemployed-parent families must participate at least 16 hours weekly in an unpaid work experience or other work program. States must restrict disclosure of information to purposes directly connected to administration of the program and to any connected investigation, prosecution, legal proceeding or audit. Each State must offer family planning services to all "appropriate" cases, including minors considered sexually active. States may not require acceptance of these services. States must have in effect an approved child support program. States must also have an approved plan for foster care and adoption assistance. States must have an income and verification system (covering AFDC, Medicaid, unemployment compensation, food stamps, and—in outlying areas—adult cash aid) in accordance with Sec. 1137 of the Social Security Act.

House bill

An "eligible State" is a State that, during the 3-year period immediately preceding the fiscal year, had submitted a plan to the Secretary of HHS for approval. The plan must include:

(1) A written document describing how the State will:

a. conduct a program that provides cash benefits to needy families with children, and provides parents with help in preparing for and obtaining employment and becoming self-sufficient;

b. require at least one parent in a family that has received benefits for 24 months to engage in work activities defined by the State;

c. ensure that parents engage in work activities in accord with section 404;

d. treat interstate immigrants, if their benefits differ from State residents;

e. take such reasonable steps as State deems necessary to restrict use and disclosure of information about recipients;

f. take actions to reduce out-of-wedlock pregnancies, including helping unmarried mothers and fathers avoid subsequent pregnancies and provide care for their children; and

g. reduce teen pregnancy, including through the provision of education and counseling to male and female teens.

(2) Certification by the Governor that the State will operate a child support enforcement program.

(3) Certification by the Governor that the State will operate a child protection program, including a foster care and adoption program.

(4) The Secretary shall determine whether the State plan contains the material required.

Senate amendment

An "eligible State" is a State that annually submits to the Secretary: an outline of its program; a 3-year strategic plan; various certifications on programs offered by the State; and an estimate of State and local expenditures. The detailed requirements of State plan submissions to the Secretary are:

(1) A written document outlining how the State intends to:

a. provide aid to needy families with at least one minor child (or any expectant family); and provide a parent or (other) caretaker in these families with work activities and support services to enable them to leave the program and become self-sufficient;

b. conduct a program designed to serve all political subdivisions;

c. provide a parent or caretaker in such families with work experience, assistance in finding employment, and other work preparation activities and support services that the State considers appropriate to enable such families to leave the program and become self-sufficient;

d. require a parent or caretaker to engage in work, as defined by the State, after 24 months of benefits, or, if earlier, when the State finds the person ready for work (see i. below for community service rule after 3 months of benefits;

e. satisfy the minimum participation rate specified in section 404;

f. treat families with minor children moving into the State; and noncitizens of the U.S.;

g. safeguard and restrict use and disclosure of information about recipients;

h. establish goals and take action to prevent and reduce out-of-wedlock pregnancies, with emphasis on teenage pregnancies; and

i. unless the State ops out by notice to the Secretary, require participation in community service (with hours and tasks set by the State), after 3 months of benefits, by a parent or caretaker not exempt from work requirements (effective 2 years after enactment).

(2) A strategic plan that shall include:

a. a description of the goals of the 3-year strategic plan, including outcome-related goals of, and benchmarks for, program activities;

b. a description of how the above goals and benchmarks will be achieved, or progress made toward them, in the current year;

c. a description of performance indicators to be used in measuring/assessing output service levels and outcomes of activities;

d. information on external factors that could significantly affect attainment of goals and benchmarks;

e. information on a mechanism for conducting program evaluation, for use in comparing results with goals and benchmarks;

f. information on how minimum participation rates specified in section 404 will be satisfied; and

g. an estimate of the total amount of State and local expenditures under the program for the current fiscal year.

(3) Certification that the State will operate a child support enforcement program.

(4 Certification that the State will operate child protection programs, including a foster care and adoption programs, under parts B and E.

(5) Certification by the Chief Executive Officer that the State will participate during the fiscal year in the income and eligibility verification system (IEVS) required by Section 1137 of Social Security Act.

(6) Certification by the Chief Executive Officer specifying which State agency or agencies will administer and supervise the program and ensuring that local governments and private sector organizations have been consulted about the plan and design of welfare services in the State.

(7) Certification by the Chief Executive Officer that the State shall provide the Secretary with required reports.

(8) Estimate of the total amount of State and local expenditures under the State program for the fiscal year.

(9) The Chief Executive Officer must certify that the State will provide Indians in each tribe that does not have a tribal family assistance plan with equitable access to assistance under the State block grant program.

(10) The State shall make available to the public a summary of the State plan and shall provide a copy to the "approved entity" conducting the audit of State expenditures from the block grant.

Conference agreement

An "eligible State" is a State that once every two years submits to the Secretary an outline of its program and various certifications on programs offered by the State. The detailed requirements of State plan submissions to the Secretary are:

(1) A written document describing how the State will:

a. conduct a program that provides assistance to needy families with children (or families that include a pregnant mother) and provides parents with job preparation, work and support services to enable them to leave the program and become self-sufficient;

b. conduct a program designed to serve all political subdivisions;

c. require a parent or caretaker to engage in work, as defined by the State, after 24 months of benefits, or, if earlier, when the State finds the person ready for work;

d. ensure that families engage in work activities in accord with section 407;

e. treat families moving into the State from another State, if such families are to be treated differently than other families;

f. take such reasonable steps as State deems necessary to safeguard and restrict the use and disclosure of information about recipients;

g. establish goals and take action to prevent and reduce out-of-wedlock pregnancies, with emphasis on teenage pregnancies; and

h. treat noncitizens, if the benefits for which they may be eligible will be different than those available to citizens.

(2) Certification by the chief executive officer that the State operate a child support enforcement program;

(3) Certification by the chief executive officer that the State will operate a child protection program and a foster care and adoption program under part B;

(4) Certification by the chief executive officer specifying which State agency or agencies will administer and supervise the program and ensuring that local governments and private sector organizations have had 60 days to submit comments about the plan and the design of welfare services in the State;

(5) Certification by the chief executive officer that the State will provide Indians in each tribe that does not have a tribal family assistance plan with equitable access to assistance under the program; and

(6) The State shall make available to the public a summary of the State plan.

For purposes of this section, the term "Eligible State" means, with respect to a fiscal year, a State that has submitted to the Secretary the plan described above within 3 months after the date of enactment.

C. Payments to States

(1) Entitlements

Present law

AFDC entitles States to Federal matching funds. Current law provides permanent authority for appropriations without limit for grants to States for AFDC benefits, administration, and AFDC-related child care. Over the years, because of court rulings, AFDC has evolved into an entitlement for individuals to receive cash benefits. In general, States must give AFDC to all persons whose income and resources are below State-set limits if they are in a class or category eligible under Federal rules.

There are no grants increased to reward states that reduce out-of-wedlock births (illegitimacy ratio).

There is no adjustment for population growth. Instead, current law provides unlimited matching funds. When AFDC enrollment climbs, Federal funding automatically rises.

There is no adjustment for emergency assistance (EA) plan amendments. Current law provides unlimited matching funds for EA expenditures.

There is no job placement performance bonus, performance bonus, or high performance bonus.

The law imposes an aggregate ceiling on matching funds for AFDC, adult cash welfare (aged, blind, disabled), and foster care and adoption assistance in Guam, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and American Samoa (AFDC, foster care, and adoption assistance only). (Sec. 1108(a) and (d) of the Social Security Act.) The Federal matching rate is 75 percent, except for adoption assistance and foster care maintenance payments, whose matching rate is 50 percent. (Note: American Samoa has not implemented AFDC). Separate funding ceilings apply to matching funds for AFDC family planning services (75 percent Federal) and for Medicaid (50 percent Federal) in each territory (sec. 1108(b) and (c) of the Social Security Act). The outlying areas listed above are entitled to JOBS matching funds (75 percent Federal), allocated on the same basis as States (by share of AFDC adult recipients). (Sec. 403(1)(1)(A) of the Social Security Act.)

Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations receive no special treatment regarding AFDC, and tribes and native organizations do not administer AFDC funds. Indian and Alaska families with children receive AFDC benefits on the same terms as other families in their States or from State or local AFDC agencies. More than 80 tribes and native organizations in 24 States are JOBS grantees, having applied to conduct JOBS within 6 months of enactment of the law establishing it. Their allocation of JOBS funds is based on the percentage of AFDC adult recipients within the State who are in the tribal service area. Their JOBS allocation is subtracted from that of their State. JOBS funds granted to Indians and Alaska natives are 100 percent Federal, requiring no matching. Further, their JOBS programs need not meet participation rules of the regular JOBS program. In FY 1995 the estimated allocation of JOBS funds for these groups totaled $8.9 million.

House bill

Each eligible State is entitled to receive a grant from the Secretary for each of 5 fiscal years (1996–2000) in the amount equal to the State family assistance grant for the fiscal year. There is no individual entitlement (implicit in bill). For each fiscal year beginning with 1998, a State's grant amount is increased by 5 percent if the State illegitimacy ratio is 1 percentage point lower in that year than its 1995 illegitimacy ratio; the State grant is increased 10 percent if the illegitimacy ratio is 2 or more percentage points lower than its 1995 illegitimacy ration. In 1997, 1998, 1999, and 2000, a State's grant amount is increased by the State's percentage share of national population growth among growing States multiplied by $100 million. States that have negative population growth are omitted from the calculation. The House bill entitles territories to a cash block grant for temporary assistance to needy families (on same basis as States). It repeals AFDC and foster care/adoption assistance (and, accordingly, territorial ceilings for them and for AFDC family planning). (Sec. 104(e)(1) of H.R. 4.) It establishes new separate territorial ceilings for adult cash welfare. The bill retains territorial ceilings for Medicaid, but repeals ceilings for AFDC family planning (along with AFDC itself). As noted, the bill repeals JOBS. The basic cash block grant for outlying areas includes base-year level JOBS funds. Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations receive no special treatment regarding the cash block grant that will replace AFDC. Tribes and native organizations would not administer the new grants. The bill repeals JOBS (sec. 104(c)), and the basic cash block grant includes base-year level JOBS funds of each State (those funds include ones earmarked previously for administration by Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations). Tribes and native organizations would not administer the new grants.

Senate amendment

The Secretary is required to pay each eligible State for each of 5 fiscal years (1996–2000) a grant equal to the State family assistance grant for the fiscal year. The amendment states that no person is entitled to any assistance under Title IV–A. For fiscal years 1998, 1999 and 2000, a State's grant amount is increased if the State illegitimacy ratio is at least 1 percentage point lower than its 1995 illegitimacy ratio and the State rate of "induced pregnancy terminations" is no higher than in 1995. The bonus equals $25 times the number of children in the State in families with income below the poverty line, according to the most recently available Census data. The bonus is $50 per poor child if the illegitimacy ratio is at least 2 percentage points lower and the abortion rate no higher than in 1995. The bonus shall not be paid if the Secretary finds that the illegitimacy ratio declined, or the abortion rate held steady, because of a change in State reporting methods. The amendment authorizes to be appropriated, and appropriates, sums necessary for these grants. For each of fiscal years 1997, 1998, 1999, and 2000, qualifying States shall receive a supplemental grant amount equal to 2.5 percent of the block grant received in the preceding fiscal year. For this purpose, a qualifying State is one with an average level of State welfare spending per poor person in the preceding fiscal year below the national average and with an estimated rate of State population growth above the average growth rate for all States for the most recent fiscal year for which information is available. Additionally, States whose population rose more than 10 percent from April 1, 1990, to July 1, 1994, are deemed eligible, as are States with a FY 1996 level of State welfare spending per poor person that is less than 35 percent of the national average level. State welfare spending per poor person is defined as the State cash block grant divided by the number of persons in the State who had an income below the poverty line, according to the 1990 decennial census. For these grants, a total of $878 million is authorized to be appropriated, and is appropriated to be spent in 1997, 1998, 1999, and 2000. The Senate amendment makes available up to a total of $800 million for grants for years FY 1996 through FY 2000 equal to increased EA expenditures in fiscal year 1995 attributable to State EA plan amendments made during fiscal year 1994. If this amount is insufficient, State EA adjustment grants are to be reduced proportionately. For each of 2 years (FY 1998 and 1999) the Secretary shall pay a job placement performance bonus to eligible States. This bonus fund shall equal 3 percent of the national cash block grant for FY1998 and 4 percent for FY1999. The DHHS Secretary shall develop a formula for allocating funds to States on the basis of the number of families who, during the previous year, lost eligibility for continued aid from the cash block grant program because of obtaining unsubsidized employment. The formula must provide a larger bonus for families who remain employed for longer periods or who are at greater risk of long-term welfare enrollment and take into account each State or geographic area's unemployment condition. For FY 2000, the Secretary shall pay a performance bonus to each qualified State. To qualify for a performance bonus, a State must exceed overall average performance of all States in a measurement category (in the time period starting 6 months after enactment and ending on September 30, 1999) or improve its own performance in a category by at least 15 percent over that of FY1994. The 5 measurement categories are: reduction in average length of time families receive cash aid, increase in the percentage of recipient families that receive child support payments, increase in the number of families who lose eligibility for continued cash aid as a result of unsubsidized work, increase in earnings of recipient families, and reduction in percentage of families that become re-eligible for cash aid within 18 months after leaving the program. The bonus fund shall equal 5 percent of the national cash block grant and is to be deducted from that grant (by reducing each State's FY2000 grant by 5 percent). For FY 2000, in addition, "high performance" States shall be entitled to a share of a high performance bonus fund. Appropriated for the high performance bonus fund is an amount equal to penalties imposed on States (and "collected" by reductions in State grants) for FYs 1996–1999. High performance bonuses will be awarded for each of the 5 measurement categories to the 5 States with the highest percentage of improvement over their FY94 baseline in the category and to the 5 States with the highest overall average performance in the category. Retains but increases aggregate ceilings in each of the territories for cash aid to needy families, cash aid to needy aged, blind or disabled adults, and foster care/adoption assistance. Ends requirement that territories share cost of cash aid for needy families. Ceilings for Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands would rise by $19.521 million (representing a 12.5 percent increase in the old ceilings, plus $8.446 million for their FY1994 JOBS funds). Retains territorial ceilings for Medicaid, but repeals ceilings for AFDC family planning (along with AFDC itself). The Senate amendment repeals JOBS, but increases ceilings for the outlying areas to include their base-year level JOBS funds. The Senate amendment allows block grant funds to be directly administered by Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations. The amount is the total of Federal AFDC payments to the State for FY 1994 attributable to Indiana families. The Senate amendment requires the DHHS Secretary to continue to pay Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations that have been JOBS grantees an annual grant equal to the amount they received in FY95 for JOBS for each of fiscal years 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999 and 2000. For this purpose it appropriates $7,638,474 for each year. These funds are separate from, and in addition to, the national cash block grant.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment on grants for family assistance, so that each eligible State is entitled to receive a grant equal to the State family assistance grant from the Secretary for each of 5 fiscal years. The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on the explicit statement that no person is entitled to any assistance under Title IV–A of the Social Security Act.

The conference agreement follows the House bill with respect to the amount of Grant Increases to Reward States that Reduce Out-of-Wedlock births (namely grant increases of 5 percent and 10 percent, based on reductions in illegitimacy). The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with respect to the determination of how States may qualify for grant increases for this purpose, including the prohibition on a State's receiving a grant increase for this purpose if the State's rate of induced pregnancy terminations is higher than in 1995.

For purposes of this part, the Secretary is to disregard changes in rates of illegitimacy due to a change in State methods of reporting such data.

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with regard to the Adjustment for Population Growth, with the modification that $800 million is authorized and appropriated for this purpose.

The conference agreement follows the House bill regarding the adjustment for Emergency Assistance Plan Amendments (no provision).

The conference agreement follows the House bill regarding the Job Placement Performance Bonus (no provision).

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the Performance Bonus, except that States that are most successful or most improved in moving families off welfare into work may reduce their 75 percent State maintenance of effort requirement by up to 8 percentage points.

The conference agreement follows the House bill regarding the High Performance Bonus (no provision).

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment regarding the treatment of outlying areas, with increases to the aggregate ceilings on cash benefits for the specified territories.

The conference agreement on H.R. 4 would:

Increase the limits on Federal grants to the territories for adult assistance and benefits and services for families with children;

Replace AFDC, EA, and JOBS with the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) block grant;

Replace the child welfare services and family preservation program with a child protection block grant;

Continue the existing programs of adult assistance; and

Provide explicit authority for the territories to transfer funds among adult assistance, temporary assistance for needy families with children, and child protection programs.

The conference agreement would require that the territories maintain their own funding effort under adult assistance, assistance for needy families with children, and child protection. For a territory to receive funds above the FY 1995 level, it would have to spend at least as much as the Federal Government counted toward their reimbursable FY 1995 spending for the replaced programs.

The chart below provides the mandatory caps and the authorization of discretionary funds for the territories agreed to by conferees. The final column of the chart shows the maximum potential payments to the territories for adult assistance, TANF, and child protection these figures represent the level of funds that each territory would receive if the territory reached its respective cap under the mandatory programs and if Congress appropriated the full authorization amount for the discretionary grant. Under P.L. 94–241, the Northern Mariana Islands are provided the same treatment as Guam under financial assistance programs.

CAPS ON MANDATORY PAYMENTS AND AUTHORIZATION OF DISCRETIONARY GRANTS TO THE TERRITORIES PROPOSED IN H.R. 4.

[In thousands of dollars]

Territory	Cap on mandatory payments	Authorization of discretionary grant	Maximum potential payment to the territories
Puerto Rico	105,538	7,951	113,489
Guam	4,902	345	5,247
Virgin Islands	3,742	275	4,017
American Samoa	1,122	190	1,312

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment regarding the treatment of Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations, except that these groups will receive benefits through their State's block grant in FY1996 and will be eligible to receive direct funding to administer their own family assistance program in FY1997 and thereafter. In order to be eligible to receive direct funding, an Indian tribe or Alaska native organization must submit a three year plan to the Secretary of HHS outlining how the will administer their program. The tribal assistance plan is subject to the approval of the Secretary of HHS. Tribes and native organizations must meet minimum work participation rates established jointly by each tribe and native organization and the Secretary of HHS. Tribes and native organizations will be subject to the same penalties as States for misusing funds, failing to pay back Federal loan funds, and failing to meet established work participation rates. Tribes and native organizations will also be required to abide by the same data collection and reporting requirements as States. In addition, all tribes and native organizations that currently receive direct funding under the JOBS program will continue to receive an annual grant equal to the amount they received in FY1995.

(2) Definitions

Present law

AFDC law defines "State" to include the 50 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa. However, special funding ceilings apply to them.

House bill

The "State family assistance grant" is determined by the greater of (1) the average of Federal obligations to the State for selected programs (AFDC benefits and administration, Emergency Assistance, and JOBS) authorized by Title IV–A for FY 1992–1994; or (2) the amount of Federal obligations for FY 1994, multiplied by the total amount of State outlays for these programs for FY 1994, divided by the amount of Federal obligations for FY 1994. The selected programs are all those authorized under Title IV–A of current law except the day care programs (the at-risk program, AFDC/JOBS day care, and transitional day care). If the sum of all the State shares, as calculated here, exceeds (or falls short of) the national block grant amount below ((2)(b)), each State's share will be reduced (or increased) proportionately.

In each fiscal year between 1996 and 2000, the "National Block Grant Amount" available to all eligible States will be equal to $15,390,296,000.

The State's "Illegitimacy Ratio" for a fiscal year is the sum of the number of out-of-wedlock births that occurred in the State during the most recent fiscal year for which the data are available and the amount, if any, by which the number of abortions performed in the State during the most recent year for which information is available exceeds the number of abortions performed in the State during the fiscal year that immediately precedes such most recent fiscal year, divided by the number of births that occurred in the State for the most recent fiscal year.

The term "State" includes the 50 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands Guam, and American Samoa.

Senate amendment

The State share of the block grant for each year equals the total Federal payments to the State under Title IV–A in Fiscal Year 1994 (for AFDC benefits and administration, Emergency Assistance, JOBS, and three child care programs—AFDC/JOBS child care, "transitional" child care, and "at-risk child care"); reduced by any amount set aside for tribal family assistance programs in the State and (FY 2000 only) by 5 percent (for the performance bonus fund) and increased by the amount, if any, of increased FY95 Emergency Assistance spending attributable to FY94 amendments.

The block grant amount is $16,803,769,000.

(Note: A major reason for the difference between the House and Senate block grant amount is that the House removed mandatory child care funds currently authorized under Title IV–A and placed most of the money in a separate discretionary child care block grant, while the Senate kept IV–A child care funds in the cash block grant but earmarked them for child care.)

The term "illegitimacy ratio" means the number of out-of-wedlock births that occurred in the State during the most recent fiscal year for which the data are available, divided by the number of births that occurred in the State during the most recent fiscal year for which the data are available.

The term "State" is identical to the House bill. However, for supplemental grants for population increases, the term "State" applies only to the 50 States.

In general, the terms "Indian," "Indian tribe organization" have the meaning given by section 4 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b). The Senate amendment provides that only 12 specified regional non-profit corporations of Alaska natives can administer tribal family assistance grants.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment with regard to the State family assistance grant, except that the State share of the block grant is determined by the greater of (1) the average of Federal payments for FY 1992–94; (2) Federal payments in FY 1994; or (3) Federal payments in FY 1995. House conferees recede with regard to the proportionate reduction in State shares included in the House bill. For all programs except JOBS, Federal payments represent the Federal share of a State's total expenditures on these programs, as reported by the States. For JOBS, the payment represents the grant amount. Table 2 summarizes the annual State allocation under the basic TANF Block Grant.

Source.—Table prepared by the Congressional Research Service (CRS), based on data from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS). Allocations based on the sum of the Federal share of expenditures for Title IV-A programs (except child care) and the grant amount for the Job Opportunity and Basic Skills (JOBS) program. Title IV-A expenditure data are based on reports by the States to the DHHS. FY1992 to FY1994 data reflect information available from DHHS, April 1995. Preliminary FY1995 data are the first 3 quarters of FY 1995 data, as reported by the States to DHHS, divided by 0.75. JOBS grant amount includes adjustments to obligations made after the close of the fiscal year. FY1992 and FY1993 JOBS grants reflect information available from DHHS, January 1995. FY1994 JOBS grants reflect information available from DHHS, April 1995. FY1995 JOBS data represent grant awards for the 4 quarters of FY1995. FY1995 data reflect information available October 1995. Allocations include an adjustment for States that had EA plan amendments related to family preservation activities in FY 1994. Estimates are based on FY1995 EA data available in August 1995. They are also based on a list of 13 States with FY 1994 EA plan amendments related to family preservation obtained by CRS from DHHS. If more States amended their EA plans for family preservation in FY 1994, the allocations for some States would be different.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the definition of a State's Illegitimacy Ratio.

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment regarding the definition of "State", but the House recedes to the Senate so that, for purposes of the supplemental grants for population increases only, the term "State" applies only to the 50 States and the District of Columbia.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the definition of "Indian."

For purposes of determining the Federal and State shares pursuant to section 457(a)(1) of the Social Security Act of amounts collected on behalf of families receiving assistance, it is the intent of the conferees that amounts collected on behalf of families receiving assistance do not include amounts distributed to the family by the State that would have been authorized as gap payments pursuant to Section 402(a)(28) of the Social Security Act as in effect on the day before enactment of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1995.

(3) Use of grant

Present law

AFDE and JOBS funds are to be used in conformity with State plans. A State may replace a caretaker relative with a protective payee or a guardian or legal representative.

Current law sets aside some JOBS funds (deducting them from State allocations) for Indian tribes and Native Alaska organizations. See (4)(C)(1)(f).

Regulations permit States to receive Federal reimbursement funds (50 percent administrative cost-sharing rate) for operation of electronic benefit systems. To do so, States must receive advance approval from DHHS and must comply with automatic data processing rule.

House bill

States may use funds in any manner reasonably calculated to accomplish the purpose of this part (except for prohibitions listed below under (4)(F)). No part of the grant may be used to provide medical services. Explicitly allowed are noncash aid to mothers under the age of 18 assistance to low-income households for heating and cooling costs.

The House bill has no set-aside provision.

In the case of families that have lived in a State for less than 12 months, States are authorized to provide them with the benefit level of the State from which they moved.

States may transfer up to 30 percent of the funds paid to the State under this section to any or all of the following: (1) child protection block grant; (2) social services block grant under the XX of the Social Security Act; (3) any food and nutrition block grant passed during the 104th Congress; and (4) the child care and development block grant program. Rules of the recipient program will apply to the transferred funds.

States are allowed to reserve some block grant funds received for any fiscal year for the purpose of providing emergency assistance under the block grant program.

States are encouraged to implement an electronic benefit transfer system for providing assistance under the State program funded under this part, and may use the grant for such purpose. In general, exempt State and local government electronic transfers of need-based benefits from certain rules issued by the Federal Reserve Board regarding electronic fund transfers, (i.e., Regulation E, which limits liability of cardholders).

Senate amendment

States may use funds in any manner reasonably calculated to accomplish the purpose of this part, provided that administrative costs not exceed 15 percent of the State's grant (except from prohibitions listed below, under section F).

The following rules apply to set-asides under the Senate amendment: (1) maintains current law set-asides for JOBS funding for Indian tribes and Alaska native organizations; (2) from the national cash block grant, the State Amendment earmarks for child care annually the amount paid with Federal funds in FY1994 for AFDC-related child care (about $980 million); and (3) for the Performance fund (FY2000 only), each State's share of the family assistance block grant shall be reduced by 5 percent. The set-aside funds are to finance FY2000 performance bonuses.

With regard to the treatment of "interstate immigrants", the Senate amendment includes a similar provision, with slight differences in wording, in relation to the House bill.

States may transfer up to 30 percent of block grant funds to the child care and development block grant program.

A State may reserve amounts paid to the State for any fiscal year for the purpose of providing assistance under this part. Reserve funds can be used in any fiscal year. Any funds set aside for child care, if reserved, must be used only for child care.

States may use a portion of the temporary assistance block grant to make payments (or provide job placement vouchers) to State-approved agencies that provide employment services to recipients of cash aid.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment with respect to the general uses of the grant, clarifying that the grant may be used in any manner reasonably calculated (including activities now authorized under titles IV-A and IV-F of the Social Security Act and providing low-income households with assistance in meeting home heating and cooling costs) to increase the flexibility of States in operating a program designed to:

(1) provide assistance to needy families so that children may be cared for in their own homes or in the homes of relatives;

(2) end the dependence of needy parents on government benefits by promoting job preparation, work, and marriage;

(3) prevent and reduce the incidence of out-of-wedlock pregnancies and establish annual numerical goals for preventing and reducing the incidence of these pregnancies; and

(4) encourage the formation and maintenance of two-parent families.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment's 15 percent cap on administrative spending. However, spending for information technology and computerization needed to implement the tracking and monitoring required by this title are excluded from this limitation.

The conference agreement follows the House bill with regard to set-asides for child care and the performance fund, and follows the Senate amendment with regard to the set-aside for Indians (no provision).

With regard to the treatment of "interstate immigrants", the conferees agree to follow the House bill and Senate amendment.

The conference agreement follows the House bill with regard to transfer of funds.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on reservation of funds.

The conference agreement follows the House bill with regard to the Electronic Benefit Transfer System.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on the authority of States to use funds to operate an employment placement program.

It is the intent of Congress that, after the date of enactment, neither the Federal nor State governments can be made liable for retroactive payments required to be made by States by court order to AFDC recipients under the current AFDC program.

(4) Cost-sharing (maintenance of effort)

Present law

Current law requires States to share program costs. For administrative costs the rate is 50 percent. For other costs it varies among States (and, within limits, is inversely related to the square of State per capita income, compared to the square of National per capita income). For AFDC benefits and AFDC-related child care, the Medicaid Federal matching rate is used; it now ranges among States from a floor of 50 percent to 79 percent. For JOBS activities, the law provides an "enhanced" rate, ranging from 60 percent to 79 percent.

House bill

No cost-sharing required.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment requires State cost-sharing for the temporary assistance block grant for 4 years, starting in FY1997. To receive the full grant for one of these years, States must spend in the preceding year from their own funds under their temporary assistance program at least 80 percent of the amount they spent in FY1994 on the replaced programs—AFDC benefits, AFDC-related child care, Emergency Assistance, and JOBS. Grants are to be reduced one dollar for each dollar by which a State falls short of this requirement. Cost-sharing also is required for "contingency" funds and additional child care funds. To qualify for contingency funds, States must spend at least 100 percent of FY1994 expenditures on programs replaced by the cash block grant. For additional child care funds they must spend at least 100 percent of FY1994 expenditures on AFDC-related child care.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that States must spend at least 75 percent of the amount they spent in FY1994.

(5) Timing of payments

Present law

The Secretary pays AFDC funds to the State on a quarterly basis.

House bill

The Secretary shall make each grant payable to a State in quarterly installments.

Senate amendment

Similar to the House provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

(6) Penalties

Present law

If the Secretary finds that a State has failed to comply with the State plan, she is to withhold all payments from the State (or limit payments to categories not affected by noncompliance).

There is no specific penalty for failure to submit a report, although the general noncompliance penalty could apply.

The Secretary is to reduce payments by 1 percent for failure to offer an provide family planning services to all appropriate AFDC recipients who request them.

Except as expressed provided, the Secretary may not regulate the conduct of the States or enforce any provisions of this paragraph.

The penalty against a State for noncompliance with child support enforcement rules—loss of AFDC matching funds—shall be suspended if a State submits and implements a corrective action plan.

House bill

The Secretary shall reduce the funds paid to a State by any amount found by audit to be in violation of this part, but the Secretary cannot reduce any quarterly payment by more than 25 percent. If necessary, funds will be withheld from the State's payments during the following year.

The Secretary must reduce by 3 percent the amount otherwise payable to a State for a fiscal year if the State has not submitted the annual report regarding the use of block grant funds within 6 months after the end of the immediately preceding fiscal year. The penalty is rescinded if the report has been submitted within 12 months.

The Secretary must reduce by 1 percent the amount of a State's annual grant if the State fails to participate in the IEVS designed to reduce welfare fraud.

With regard to failure to offer and provide family services, there is no penalty specified, but States are allowed to use block grant funds to pay for family planning services.

Except as expressly provided, the Secretary may not regulate the conduct of States under Part A of Title IV or enforce any provision of it.

There is no provision in the House bill regarding overdue repayments to the Federal rainy day loan fund, which is described below.

Senate amendment

For all penalties, the Secretary may not impose any of the penalties if she finds the State had reasonable cause for its failure to comply with the relevant provision. The State must spend on the block grant program a sum of its own funds to equal the amount of withheld Federal dollars. No quarterly payment may be reduced more than 25 percent. If necessary, penalty funds will be withheld from the State's payment for the next year. Except for the first item, all penalties take effect October 1, 1996.

The Secretary shall reduce funds paid to a State by any amount found by audit to be in violation of this part. If the State does not prove to the Secretary that the unlawful expenditure was not made intentionally, the Secretary shall impose an additional penalty of 5 percent of the basic block grant.

If a State fails to submit the annual report required by sec. 409 within 6 months after the end of a fiscal year, the Secretary shall reduce by 5 percent the amount otherwise payable to the State for the next year. However, the penalty shall be rescinded if the State submits the report before the end of the year in which the report was due.

The Secretary shall reduce by not more than 5 percent the annual grant of a State, if the State fails to participate in the IEVS designed to reduce welfare fraud.

If the Secretary determines that a State does not enforce penalties requested by the Title IV-D child support enforcement agency against receipts of cash aid who fail to cooperate in establishing paternity in accordance with Part D, the Secretary shall reduce the cash assistance block grant by not more than 5 percent.

Except as expressly provided, neither the DHHS Secretary nor the Treasury Secretary may regulate the conduct of States under Part A of Title IV nor enforce any provision of it.

If a State fails to pay any amount borrowed from the Federal Loan Fund for State Welfare Programs within the maturity period, plus any interest owed, the Secretary shall reduce the State's cash assistance block grant for the immediately succeeding fiscal year quarter by the outstanding loan amount, plus the interest owed on it. The Secretary may not forgive these overdue debts.

The Senate amendment requires the Federal government, before assessing a penalty against a State under any program established or modified by the act, to notify the State about the violation and allow it to enter into a corrective compliance plan within 60 days after notification. The Federal government shall have 60 days to accept or reject the plan; if it accepts the plan, and if the State corrects the violation, no penalty shall be assessed. If the State fails to make a timely correction, some or all of the penalty shall be assessed. An alternate corrective action section requires a State to correct the violation pursuant to its plan within 90 days after the Federal government accepts the plan.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on the general conditions for setting penalties; i.e., penalties may not be imposed if the Secretary finds the State has reasonable cause for its failure to comply; the State must spend on the block grant program a sum of its own funds to equal the amount of withheld Federal dollars; no quarterly payment may be reduced more than 25 percent; if necessary, penalty funds will be withheld from the State's payment for the next year; and that, except for the first item, all penalties take effect October 1, 1996.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on penalties for use of the grant for unauthorized purposes. The conferees also agreed that if a State could not demonstrate to the Secretary that the State did not intend to use the amount in violation of this part, an additional penalty of 5 percent is imposed on the grant amount. The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment regarding penalties for State failure to submit the required report, except that the penalty is to be a reduction of 4 percent in the block grant. The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment regarding penalties for State failure to participate in the Income and Eligibility Verification System, except that the penalty is to be 2 percent.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on penalties for State failure to cooperate on child support enforcement. The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment regarding penalties for failure to offer and provide family planning services (no provision). The conference agreement includes penalties for failure to satisfy minimum work participation rates. The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the limitation of Federal authority.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the penalty for failure to timely repay the Federal loan fund for State welfare programs. The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the Corrective Action Plan.

(7) Federal rainy day loan fund

Present law

No provision. Instead, current law provides unlimited matching funds.

House bill

The Federal government will establish a fund of $1 billion modeled on the Federal Unemployment Account, which is part of the Unemployment Compensation system. The fund is to be administered by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, who must deposit into the fund any principal or interest payments received with respect to a loan made under this provision. Funds are to remain available without fiscal year limitation for the purpose of making loans and receiving payments of principal and interest. States must repay their loans, with interest, within 3 years. The rate of interest will equal the current average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods to maturity comparable to the period to maturity of the loan. At any given time, no State can borrow more from the fund than half its annual share of block grant funds or $100 million, whichever is less. States may borrow from the fund if their total unemployment rate for any given 3-month period is more than 6.5 percent and is at least 110 percent of the same measure in the corresponding quarter of the previous 2 years.

Senate amendment

Establishes a $1.7 billion revolving loan fund called the "Federal Loan Fund for State Welfare Programs." The Secretary shall make loans, and the rate of interest will equal the current average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods to maturity comparable to the period to maturity of the loan. Ineligible are States that have been penalized for misspending block grant funds as determined by an audit. Loans are to mature in 3 years, at the latest, and the maximum amount loaned to a State cannot exceed 10 percent of its basic block grant, and States face penalties for failing to make timely payments on their loan.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

(8) Contingency fund (for States with high unemployment)

Present law

No provision. Current law provides unlimited matching funds.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Establishes a "Contingency Fund for State Welfare Programs" and appropriates funds of up to $1 billion for a total period of 7 years (FY 1996–2002). The fund would provide matching grants (at the Medicaid matching rate) to States that have unemployment rates above specified levels, provided they first spend from their own funds a yearly sum a least equal to their FY 1994 expenditures on AFDC, AFDC-related child care, Emergency Assistance, and JOBS. The maximum contingency grant could not exceed 20 percent of a State's temporary assistance block grant. Eligible would be States that met the maintenance of effort requirement and had an average rate of total unemployment, seasonally adjusted, of at least 6.5 percent during the most recent 3 months with published data and a rate at least 10 percent above that of either or both of the corresponding 3-month periods in the 2 preceding calendar years.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

(9) Additional day care funds

Present law

No provision. Current law provides unlimited matching funds for AFDC/JOBS child care and transition child care (but a capped amount for "at-risk" care).

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment authorizes to be appropriated, and appropriates, $3 billion in matching grants to States for the 5-year period beginning in FY1996 for child care assistance (in addition to Federal funds set aside for child care in the family assistance block grant). The funds, which are allocated among the States on the basis of their share of the nation's child population, are to be used to reimburse a State, at the Medicaid matching rate, for child care spending in a fiscal year that exceeds its share of child care set-aside funds (100 percent Federal) plus the amount it spent from its own funds in FY1994 for AFDC/JOBS child care, transitional child care, and at-risk child care. Funds are to be used only for child care assistance under Part IV–A. In the last quarter of the fiscal year, FY2000, if any portion of a State allotment is not used, the Secretary shall make it available to applicant States. Notwithstanding section 658T of the Child Care and Development Block Grant Act, the State agency administering the family assistance block grant shall determine eligibility for all child care assistance provided under Title IV–A. (For budget scoring, the Amendment states that the baseline shall assume that no grant will be made after FY2000.)

Conference agreement

See discussion in Title VIII of the conference agreement under Child Care and Development Block Grant. In general, conferees agree on a child care block grant that provides States with a total of $18 billion in funds for child care, $11 billion of which is entitlement funding.

D. Contracts/Client Agreements

(1) Terms

Present law

After assessing the needs and skills of recipients and developing an employability plan, States may require JOBS participants to negotiate and enter into an agreement that specifies their obligations.

House law

No provision.

Senate amendment

States must assess, through a case manager, the skills of each parent for use in developing and negotiating a personal responsibility contract (PRC). Each recipient family must enter into a contract developed by the State or into a limited benefit plan. The PRC means a binding contract outlining steps to be taken by the family and State to get the family "off of welfare" and specifying a negotiated time-limited period of eligibility for cash aid. An alternate provision requires the case manager to consult with the parent applicant (client) in developing a PRC, lists client activities that the PRC might require, specifies that clients must agree to accept a bona fide offer of an unsubsidized full-time job unless they have good cause not to, but does not require a time limit in the PRC nor make provision for a limited benefit plan. A State may exempt a battered person from entering into a PRC if its terms would endanger his/her well-being.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (no provision).

(2) Penalties

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The PRC is to provide that if a family fails to comply with its terms, the family automatically will enter into a limited benefit plan (with a reduced benefit and later termination of aid, in accordance with a schedule determined by the State). If the State agency violates the PRC, the contract shall be invalid. The State is to establish a procedure, including the opportunity for hearing, to resolve disputes concerning participation in the PRC. The alternate PRC language provides these penalties: for the first act of noncompliance with the PRC, 33 percent reduction in the family's benefit for one month; for the second act, 66 percent reduction for 3 months; for third and subsequent acts of noncompliance, loss of eligibility for 6 months. Job refusal without good cause is treated as a third violation. However, in no case shall the penalty period extend beyond the duration of noncompliance.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (no provision).

E. Mandatory Work Requirements

(1) Work activities

Present law

JOBS programs must include specified educational activities (high school or equivalent education, basic and remedial education, and education for those with limited English proficiency); jobs skills training, job readiness activities, and job development and placement. In addition, States must offer at least two of these four items: group and individual job search; on-the-job training; work supplementation or community work experience program (CWEP) (or another work experience program approved by the DHHS Secretary). The State also may offer postsecondary education in "appropriate" cases.

House bill

"Work activities" are defined as unsubsidized employment, subsidized employment, subsidized public sector employment or work experience, on-the-job training, job search, education and training directly related to employment, and jobs skills training directly related to employment. Satisfactory attendance at secondary school, at State option, may be included as a work activity for a parent under 20 who has not completed high school.

Senate amendment

Establishes this list of work activities: unsubsidized employment, subsidized employment, on-the-job training, community service programs, job search (first 4 weeks only) and vocational educational training (12 months maximum). For work participation requirements, the proportion of persons counted as engaged in "work" through participation in vocational educational training cannot exceed 25 percent. For each tribe receiving a family assistance block grant, the Secretary, with participation of Indians tribes, shall establish minimum work participation rules, appropriate time limits for benefits, and penalties, similar to the general family assistance rules but consistent with the economic conditions and resources of the tribe.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with the modification that, for the work participation requirements, the proportion of persons counted as engaged in work through participation in vocational education cannot exceed 20 percent.

(2) Participation requirements: all families

Present law

The following minimum percentage of nonexempt AFDC families must participate in JOBS:

Fiscal year:	Minimum Percentage
1995 (last year)	20
1996 and thereafter (no requirement)	0

Exempt from JOBS are parents whose youngest child is under 3 (1, at State option). Other exemptions include persons who are ill, incapacitated or needed at home because of illness or incapacity of another person. Also exempt are parents of a child under 6, unless the State guarantees child care and requires no more than 20 hours weekly of JOBS activity.

Participation rates are calculated for each month. A State's rate, expressed as a percentage, equals the number of actual JOBS participants divided by the number of AFDC recipients required to participate (non-exempt from JOBS).

In calculating a State's overall JOBS participation rate, a standard of 20 hours per week is used. The welfare agency is to count as participants the largest number of persons whose combined and averaged hours in JOBS activities during the month equal 20 per week.

The law requires States to guarantee child care when needed for JOBS participants and for other AFDC parents in approved education and training activities. Regulations require States to guarantee care for children under age 13 (older if incapable of self-care) to the extent that it is needed to permit the parent to work, train, or attend school. States must continue child care benefits for 1 year to ex-AFDC working families, but must charge them an income-related fee.

House bill

The following minimum percentages of all families receiving cash assistance must engage in work activities:

Minimum Percentage

Fiscal year:
1996	10
1997	15
1998	20
1999	25
2000	27
2001	29
2002	40
2003 or thereafter	50

If States achieve net caseload reductions, they receive credit for the number of families by which the caseload is reduced for purposes of meeting the overall family participation requirements. The minimum participation rate shall be reduced by the percentage by which the number of recipient families during the fiscal year falls below the number of AFDC families in fiscal year 1995, except to the extent that the Secretary determines that the caseload reduction was required by terms of Federal law.

The fiscal year participation rates are the average of the rates for each month during the year. The monthly participation rates are measured by the number of recipient families in which an individual is engaged in work activities for the month, divided by the total number of recipient families that include a person who is 18 or older.

To be counted as engaged in work activities for a month, the recipient must be making progress in qualified activities for at least the minimum average number of hours per week shown in the table below. Of these hours, at least 20 hours must be spent in unsubsidized employment, subsidized private sector employment, subsidized public sector employment, work experience, or on-the-job training. During the first 4 weeks of required work activity, hourly credit also is given for job search and job readiness assistance.

Minimum average hours weekly

Fiscal year:
1996	20
1997	20
1998	20
1999	25
2000	30
2001	30
2002	35
2003 or thereafter	35

Although a person must work at least 20 hours weekly in order for any hours of their training or education to count toward required participation, the bill does not prohibit a State from offering cash recipients an opportunity to participate in education or training before requiring them to work. In this case, however, participation does not count toward fulfillment of the State mandatory participation rate. Note: although the above table is in a paragraph entitled "requirements applicable to all families receiving assistance," another paragraph establishes a higher hourly requirement (35 hours weekly) in all years for 2-parent families. See below.

Senate amendment

The following minimum percentages of all families receiving cash assistance (except those with a child under 1, if exempted by the State) must participate in work activities:

Minimum percentage

Fiscal year:
1996	25
1997	30
1998	35
1999	40
2000 or thereafter	50

The Secretary is directed to prescribe regulations for reducing the minimum participation rate required for a State if its caseload under the new program is smaller than in the final year of AFDC, but not if the decrease was required by Federal law or results from changes in eligibility criteria adopted by the State. With these qualifications, the regulations are to reduce the participation rate by the number of percentage points, if any, by which the caseload in a fiscal year is smaller than in FY1995.

States may exempt a parent or caretaker relative of a child under one year old and may exclude them from the participation rate calculation. States may exempt a battered person if their well-being would be endangered by a work requirement.

As in the House bill, the fiscal year participation rate is the average of the rates for each month of the year. However, overall monthly rates are measured by adding (1) the number of recipient families with an adult engaged in work for the month, (2) the number subject to a work refusal penalty in the month (if not subject to the penalty for more than 3 months out of the preceding 12), and (3) the number who worked their way off the program in the previous 6 months and that include an adult who is working for the month, and then dividing this total by the number of families enrolled in the program during the month that include an adult recipient. States have the option to include in the calculation of monthly participation rates families who receive assistance under a tribal family assistance plan if the Indian or Alaska Native is participating in work under standards comparable to those of the State for being engaged in work.

To be counted as engaged in work for a month, an adult must be participating in work for at least the minimum average number of hours per week shown in the table below (of which not fewer than 20 hours per week are attributable to a work activity). See list of work activities above.

Exception to the table: In FY1999 and thereafter, when required weekly hours rise above 20, a State may count a single parent with a child under age 6 as engaged in work for a month if the parent works an average of 20 hours weekly. Also, community service participants may be treated as engaged in work if they provide child care services for another participant for the number of hours deemed appropriate by the State.

Minimum average hours weekly

Fiscal year:
1996	20
1997	20
1998	20
1999	25
2000	30
2001	30
2002	35
2003 or thereafter	35

Note: Although the above table is in a paragraph entitled "all families," another paragraph establishes a higher hourly requirement (35 hours weekly) in all years for 2-parent families. See below.

The Senate amendment states that nothing in sec. 421 (amounts for child care) shall be construed to provide an entitlement to child care services to any child.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment as follows:

The following minimum percentages of all families receiving cash assistance (except those with a child under 1, if exempted by the State) must participate in work activities:

Minimum percentage

Fiscal year:
1996	15
1997	20
1998	25
1999	30
2000	35
2001	40
2002 or thereafter	50

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment regarding reduction in the participation rate, including the requirement that regulations shall not take into account families diverted from the State program as a result of differences in eligibility criteria under the State program (in comparison with the AFDC program that operated prior to the date of enactment). The conferees agree to modify the Senate provision by requiring that regulations shall place the burden on the Secretary to prove that families were diverted as a direct result of differences in eligibility criteria.

The conference agreement follows the House bill regarding exemptions from the work requirement for battered individuals, and follows the Senate amendment regarding the State option to exempt families with a child under 1.

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment regarding the calculation of the fiscal year rate. The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment regarding the calculation of monthly rates, except that the Senate recedes on counting people who have worked their way off the rolls in the previous 6 months and including sanctioned individuals in the numerator; conferees agree that sanctioned persons are to be subtracted from the denominator in determining monthly rates.

The conference agreement follows the House bill with regard to the number counted as engaged in work, except that the phrase "making progress in qualified activities" is replaced with "participating in qualified activities."

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment regarding the minimum average hours of weekly work required. Conferees did not agree to the Senate provision that States have the option of allowing single parents with children under 6 to work only 20 hours per week and still count toward the participation standard.

(3) Participation requirements: Two-parent families

Present law

The following minimum percentages of two-parent families receiving cash assistance must participate in specified work activities:

Minimum percentage

Fiscal year:
1995	50
1996	60
1997	75
1998 (last year)	75

1999 and thereafter (no requirement)	0

Participation rates for a month equal the number of parents who participate divided by the number of principal earners in AFDC-UP families (but excluding families who received aid for 2 months or less, if one parent engaged in intensive job search).

One parent in the 2-parent family must participate at least 16 hours weekly in on-the-job training, work supplementation, community work experience program, or a State-designated work program.

House bill

The following minimum percentages of two-parent families receiving cash assistance must engage in work activities:

Minimum percentage

Fiscal year:
1996	50
1997	50
1998 (last year)	90
1999 and thereafter	90

Participation rates for a month are measured by the number of two-parent recipient families in which at least one adult is engaged in work activities for the month, divided by the total number of two-parent families that received cash aid during the month.

An adult in a 2-parent family is engaged in work activities when making progress in them for 35 hours per week, at least 30 of which are in unsubsidized employment, subsidized private sector employment, subsidized public sector employment, work experience, or on-the-job training (or job search and job readiness assistance for the first 4 weeks only).

Senate amendment

The following minimum percentages of two-parent families receiving cash assistance must participate in work:

Minimum percentage

Fiscal year:
1996	60
1997	75
1998	75
1999 and thereafter	90

Participation rates for 2-parent families are measured (like those for all families) by adding (1) the number of 2-parent recipient families with an adult engaged in work for the month; (2) the number of 2-parent families subject to a work refusal penalty in the month (if not subject to the penalty for more than 3 months out of the preceding 12); and (3) the number of 2-parent families who worked their way off the program in the previous 6 months and that include an adult who is working for the month, and then dividing this total by the number of 2-parent families enrolled in the program during the month that include an adult recipient.

An adult in a 2-parent family must participate in work for at least 35 hours per week during the month, and at least 30 hours weekly must be attributable to one or more of the 6 work activities listed above in "4.E. Mandatory Work Requirements."

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment so that the following minimum percentages of two-parent families receiving cash assistance must participate in specified work activities:

Minimum percentage

Fiscal year:
1996	50
1997	75
1998	75
1999 and thereafter	90

With regard to participation rates for a month, the conference agreement for 2-parent families matches the agreement for all families described above, so that the rates equal the number of two-parent recipient families in which at least one adult is engaged in work activities for the month, divided by the total number of two-parent families that received cash assistance minus sanctioned persons.

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment regarding creditable activities, except the House and Senate compromise so that the percentage of the caseload able to be counted as engaged in a work activity through vocational education training cannot exceed 20 percent.

(4) Penalties

Present law

For failure to meet JOBS requirements without good cause, AFDC benefits are denied to the offending parent and payments for the children are made to a third party.

In a 2-parent family, failure of 1 parent to meet JOBS requirements without good cause results in denial of benefits for both parents (unless the other parent participates) and third-party payment on behalf of the children. Repeated failures to comply bring potentially longer penalty periods.

If a State fails to achieve the two required participation rates (overall and for 2-parent families), the Federal reimbursement rate for its JOBS spending (which ranges among States from 60 percent to 79 percent for most JOBS costs) is to be reduced to 50 percent.

House bill

If recipients refuse to participate in required work activities, their cash assistance is reduced by an amount to be determined by individual States, subject to good cause and other exceptions that the State may establish.

Recipients in two-parent families who fail to work the required number of hours receive the proportion of their monthly cash grant that equals the proportion of required work hours they actually worked during the month, or less at State option.

No officer or employee of the Federal government may regulate the conduct of States under this paragraph (about penalties against individuals) or enforce this paragraph against any State.

States not meeting the required participation rates have their overall grant (calculated without the bonus for reducing out-of-wedlock births and before other penalties listed in C(5) above) reduced by up to 5 percent the following fiscal year; penalties shall be based on the degree of noncompliance as determined by the Secretary.

Senate amendment

If an adult recipient refuses to engage in required work, the State shall reduce the amount of assistance to the family pro rata (or more, at State option) with respect to the period of work refusal, or shall discontinue aid, subject to good cause and other exceptions that the State may establish. A State may not penalize a single parent caring for a child under age 6 for refusal to work if the parent has a demonstrated inability to obtain needed child care. Penalties against individuals in 2-parent families follow those against individuals, except that the penalties may apply against parents of children under 6 who refuse to work due to an inability to obtain child care.

No specific provision about regulation of penalties against individuals. However, the amendment provides that neither the DHHS Secretary nor the Treasury Secretary may regulate the conduct of States under Title IV-A or enforce any of its provisions, except to the extent expressly provided in the Act.

If a State fails to meet minimum work participation rates, the Secretary is to reduce the family assistance block grant as follows: For the first year of failure, by 5 percent (applied in the next year); for subsequent years of failure, by an additional 5 percent (thus, by 5.25 percent). The Secretary shall impose reductions on the basis of the degree of noncompliance.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding penalties against individuals, with the modification that the burden of proof to demonstrate an inability to find needed child care rests on the parent of a child under age 6. The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding penalties against individuals in two-parent families.

The conference agreement follows the House bill on penalties against States not meeting work requirements, except the House recedes to the Senate on the corrective action provision.

(5) Rule of interpretation (concerning education and training)

Present law

JOBS programs must include specified educational activities and job skills training.

House bill

This part does not prohibit a State from establishing a program for recipients that involves education and training.

Senate amendment

No provision. However, the amendment qualifies vocational educational training as a "work activity," with a 12-month maximum and a limit on the proportion of vocational educational trainees who can be counted in calculating work participation rates.

Conference agreement

The House recedes (no provision). Vocational training, however, counts in the calculation of participation standards with the limitation described above.

(6) Research (about work programs)

Present law

Authorizes States to make "initial" evaluations (in FY 1991) of demographic characteristics of JOBS participants and requires the DHHS Secretary, in consultation with the Labor Secretary, to assist the States as needed.

House bill

The Secretary is to conduct research on the costs and benefits of mandatory work requirements in the Act, and to evaluate promising State approaches in employing welfare recipients. See also "Research, Evaluations, and National Studies" below.

Senate amendment

The Secretary is to conduct research on the costs, benefits, and effects of operating different State programs of temporary assistance to needy families, including their time limits. Research shall include studies of effects on employment rates. See also "Research, Evaluations, and National Studies" below.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

(7) Evaluation of innovative approaches to employing recipients of assistance

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary shall evaluate innovative approaches by the States to employ recipients of assistance.

Senate amendment

The Secretary may assist States in developing, and shall evaluate innovative approaches for reducing welfare dependency and increasing the well-being of minor children, using random assignments in these evaluations "to the maximum extent feasible."

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

(8) Annual ranking of States and review of work programs

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary must annually rank the States in the order of their success in moving recipients into long-term private sector jobs, and review the 3 most and 3 least successful programs. HHS will develop these rankings based on data collected under the bill.

Senate amendment

Taking account of the number of poor children in the State and funds provided for them, the Secretary of HHS shall rank the States annually in the order of their success in placing recipients into long-term private sector jobs, reducing the overall caseload, and, when a practicable method for calculation becomes available, diverting persons from application and entry into the program. The Secretary shall review the 3 most and 3 least successful programs that provide work experience, help in finding jobs, and provide other support services to enable families to become independent of the program.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

(9) Annual ranking of States and review of out-of-wedlock births

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Secretary is to annually rank States in the order of their success in reducing out-of-wedlock births and to review the programs of the 5 ranked highest and 5 ranked lowest in decreasing their absolute out-of-wedlock birth ratios (defined as the total number of out-of-wedlock births in families receiving cash assistance, divided by the total number of births in recipient families).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

(10) Sense of Congress on work priority for mothers without young children

Present law

No provision.

House bill

It is the sense of Congress that States should give highest priority to requiring families with older preschool children or school-aged children to engage in work activities.

Senate amendment

Adds to highest priority group "adults in 2-parent families and adults in single-parent families with children that are older than preschool age."

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

(11) Work/school requirements for noncustodial parents

Present law

The Secretary shall permit up to 5 States, on a voluntary or mandatory basis, to provide JOBS services to unemployed noncustodial parents unable to pay child support

House bill

States must adopt procedures to ensure that persons owing past-due support to a child (or to a child and parent) receiving Title IV–A either work or have a plan for payment of that support. States must seek a court order requiring the parent to make payment, in accordance with a court-approved plan to work (unless incapacitated). It is the sense of Congress that States should require non-custodial, non-supporting parents under age 18 to fulfill community work obligations and attend appropriate parenting or money management classes after school.

Senate amendment

States must seek a court order or administrative order requiring a person who owes support to a child receiving Title IV–D services to pay the support in accordance with a court-approved plan or to work (unless incapacitated).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

(12) Delivery of work activities

Present law

Current law permits States to carry out JOBS programs directly or through arrangement or under contracts with administrative entities under the Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA), with State and local educational agencies or with private organizations, including community-based organizations as defined in JTPA (Section 485(A) of Social Security Act).

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires that work activities for recipients of the temporary family assistance program be delivered through the Statewide workforce development system that was earlier included in the Work Opportunity Act, unless a required activity is not available locally through the Statewide workforce development system. However, as passed, the amendment does not include the workforce development title.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (no provision).

(13) Displacement of workers

Present law

Under JOBS law, no work assignment may displace any currently employer worker or position (including partial displacement such as a reduction in hours of non-overtime work, wages, or employment benefits). Nor may a JOBS participant fill a position vacant because of layoff or because the employer has reduced the workforce with the effect of creating a position to be subsidized.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Provides that no adult in a Title IV–A work activity shall be employed or assigned when another person is on layoff from the same or a substantially equivalent job, or when the employer has terminated the employment of a regular worker or otherwise caused an involuntary reduction of its workforce in order to fill the vacancy thus created with a subsidized worker. This provision does not preempt or supersede any State or local law providing greater protection from displacement.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

F. Prohibitions

(1) Families without a minor child

Present law

Only families with dependent children (under age 18, or 19 at State option if the child is still in secondary school or in the equivalent level of vocational or technical training) can participate in the program.

House bill

Only families with minor children (under 18 years of age or under 19 years of age for full-time students in a secondary school or the equivalent) can participate in the program.

Senate amendment

Similar to House bill, but specifies that the minor children must live with their parent or other caretaker relative.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with the modification that a pregnant individual may receive assistance under the block grant.

(2) Assistance for aliens

Present law

Illegal aliens are ineligible, but legal aliens and others permanently residing under color of law are eligible for Federal means-tested benefit programs. States must operate a System for Verification of Eligibility (SAVE) for determination of immigration or citizenship status of applicants and must verify the immigration status of aliens with the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

House bill

Block grant funds may not be used to provide cash benefits to a non-citizen unless the individual is a refugee under section 207 of the Immigration and Nationality Act who has been in the U.S. for under 5 years, a legal permanent resident over age 75 who has lived in the U.S. at least 5 years, a veteran (or the spouse or unmarried dependent child of a veteran) honorably discharged from the U.S. Armed Forces, or a legal permanent resident unable because of disability or mental impairment to comply with certain naturalization requirements. In addition, legal permanent residents who are current beneficiaries retain eligibility for the first year after enactment.

Senate amendment

Aliens entering after enactment are barred from receiving benefits for 5 years, with exceptions similar to House bill. Separately, States have the option to deny non-citizens benefits using block grant funds. Eligibility may be affected by changes in the sponsor-to-alien deeming provisions. These changes may affect their eligibility even after aliens have attained citizenship.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment so that noncitizens arriving after the date of enactment may not receive benefits from the block grant during their first 5 years in the U.S.; the conference agreement modifies the Senate amendment so that there is a State option to provide block grant assistance to noncitizens currently residing in the U.S., except that noncitizens receiving AFDC benefits on the date of enactment would continue to be eligible to receive block grant benefits until January 1, 1997. The conference agreement makes specific exceptions to these restrictions for refugees, asylees, veterans and active duty military, and aliens who have worked at least 40 calendar quarters as defined under title II of the Social Security Act. For further details see Title IV: Noncitizens.

(3) No cash assistance for out-of-wedlock births

Present law

No provision forbidding eligibility. Current law permits a State to provide AFDC to an unwed mother under 18 and her child only if they live with their parent or another adult relative or in another adult-supervised arrangement; exceptions are allowed (Sec. 402(A)).

AFDC law has no provision directly comparable for funding second-chance homes (see below).

AFDC law requires States, to the extent resources permit, to require mothers under age 20 who failed to complete high school to participate in an educational activity, even if they otherwise would be exempt because of having a child under age 3 (or, at State option, under age 1). However, States may exempt some school dropout mothers under 18 years old from this requirement.

House bill

Temporary Assistance for Needy Families Block Grant funds may not be used to provide cash benefits to a child born out-of-wedlock to a mother under age 18 or to the mother until the mother reaches age 18. States must exempt mothers to whom children are born as a result of rape or incest. Block grant funds can be used to provide non-cash (e.g. voucher) assistance to young mothers and their children.

Senate amendment

Explicitly permits States to decide whether or not to give assistance to a child born out-of-wedlock to a mother under 18 years old, and to the mother until she reaches 18. However, if a State elects to extend assistance to these families, the minor mother must live with a parent, legal guardian or other adult relative unless they have no such appropriate relative or the State agency determines (1) that they had suffered, or might suffer, harm in the relative's home or (2) that the requirement should be waived for the sake of the child.

The State shall provide or assist a minor mother in finding a suitable home, a second chance home, maternity home, or other appropriate adult-supervised supportive living arrangement. The amendment authorizes to be appropriated, and appropriates funding for second-chance homes for unmarried teenage parents ($25 million yearly for FYs 1996 and 1997 and $20 million yearly for FYs 1998–2000).

Further, if a State aids these unwed minor mothers, it must require those who have not completed high school, or its equivalent, to attend school unless their child is under 12 weeks old. If the mother fails to attend high school or an approved alternative training program, the State must reduce her benefit or end it.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the state option to deny cash assistance for out-of-wedlock births. The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with regard to second chance homes, except that funding is authorized but not appropriated for this purpose. The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the school requirement for unwed minor mothers.

(4) No additional assistance for additional children

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Block grant funds may not be used to provide additional cash benefits for a child born to a recipient of cash welfare benefits, or an individual who received cash benefits at any time during the 10-month period ending with the birth of the child. Mothers to whom children are born as a result of rape or incest are exempted. Block grant funds can be used to provide non-cash (voucher) assistance to young mothers and their children.

Senate amendment

Explicitly permits States to deny aid to child born to a mother already receiving aid under the program or to one who received benefits from the program at any time during the 10 months ending with the baby's birth.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement represents a compromise between the House and Senate provisions. The compromise is that States must deny additional assistance to mothers already receiving assistance who have babies, but that States can exempt themselves from this requirement if they enact a law to the effect that the State wants to be excluded from this Federal requirement.

(5) No assistance for more than 5 years

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Block grant funds may not be used to provide cash benefits for the family of an individual who, after attaining 18 years of age, has received block grant funds for 60 months, whether or not successive; States are permitted to provide hardship exemptions from the 60-month time limit for up to 10 percent of their caseload.

Senate amendment

Block grant funds may not be used to provide cash benefits for the family of a person who has received block grant aid for 60 months (or less at State option), whether or not consecutive. States may give hardship exemptions to up to 20 percent of their caseload. (Exempted from the 60-month time limit is a person who received aid as a minor child and who later applied as the head of her own household with a minor child.)

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that no assistance may be provided beyond 5 years and that States may exempt up to 15 percent of their caseload from this limit. Battered individuals may qualify for this exemption, but States are not required to exempt such individuals.

(6) Reduction or elimination of assistance for noncooperation in child support

Present law

As a condition of eligibility, applicants or recipients must cooperate in establishing paternity of a child born out-of-wedlock, in obtaining support payments, and in identifying any third party who may be liable to pay for medical care and services for the child.

House bill

Block grant funds may not be used to provide cash benefits to persons who fail to cooperate with the State child support enforcement agency in establishing the paternity of any child of the individual; the child support agency defines cooperation.

Senate amendment

Maintains current law. In addition, see "Payments To States" for penalty against a State that fails to enforce penalty requested by the IV–D against a person who does not cooperate in establishing paternity.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with the modification that States must deny a parent's share of the family welfare benefit if the parent fails to cooperate; the State may deny benefits to the entire family for failure to cooperate.

(7) No assistance for families not assigning support rights to the State

Present law

As a condition of AFDC eligibility, applicants must assign child support and spousal support rights to the State.

House bill

Block grant funds may not be used to provide cash benefits to a family with an adult who has not assigned to the State rights to child support or spousal support.

Senate amendment

Gives States the option to require applicants for temporary family assistance (and recipients) to assign child support and spousal support rights to the State.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

(8) Withholding portion of aid for child whose paternity is not established

Present law

No provision.

House bill

If, at the time a family applies for assistance, the paternity of a child in the family has not been established, the State must impose a financial penalty ($50 or 15 percent of the monthly benefits of a family of that size, whichever the State chooses) until the paternity of the child is established. Once paternity is established, all the money withheld as a penalty must be remitted to the family if it is still eligible for aid. Mothers to whom children are born as a result of rape or incest are exempted from this penalty. Provision effective 1 year after enactment (2 years at State option).

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with the modification that States may, but are not required to, impose a financial penalty if paternity is not established.

(9) Denial of benefits to persons who fraudulently received aid in two States

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Ineligible for block grant assistance for 10 years is any individual convicted of having fraudulently misrepresented residence (or found by a State to have made a fraudulent statement) in order to obtain benefits or services from two or more States from the block grant, Medicaid, Food Stamps, or Supplemental Security Income.

Senate amendment

Ineligible for block grant assistance for 10 years is any person convicted in Federal court or State court of having fraudulently misrepresented residence in order to obtain benefits or services from two or more States from the cash block grant, Medicaid, Food Stamps, or Supplemental Security Income.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

(10) Denial of aid for fugitive felons, probation and parole violators

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No assistance may be provided to an individual who is fleeing to avoid prosecution, custody or confinement after conviction for a crime (or an attempt to commit a crime) that is a felony (or, in New Jersey, a high misdemeanor), or who violates probation or parole imposed under Federal or State law.

Any safeguards established by the State against use or disclosure of information about individual recipients shall not prevent the agency, under certain conditions, from providing the address of a recipient to a law enforcement officer who is pursuing a fugitive felon or parole or probation violator. This provision applies also to a recipient sought by an officer not because he is a fugitive but because he has information that the officer says is necessary for his official duties. In both cases the officer must notify the State that location or apprehension of the recipient is within his official duties.

Senate amendment

A State shall furnish law enforcement officers, upon their request, the address, social security number, and photograph (if available) of any recipient if the officers notify the agency that the recipient is a fugitive felon, or a violator of probation or parole, or that he has information needed by the officers to perform their duties, and that the location or apprehension of the recipient is within the officers' official duties.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

(11) No assistance for minor children who are absent, or relatives who fail to notify agency of child's absence

Present law

Regulations allow benefits to continue for children who are "temporarily absent" from home.

House bill

No assistance may be provided for a minor child who has been absent from the home for 45 consecutive days or, at State option, between 30 and 90 consecutive days. States may establish a good cause exemption as long as it is detailed in the State report to the Secretary. No assistance can be given to a parent or caretaker who fails to report a missing minor child within 5 days of the time it is clear that the child is absent.

Senate amendment

Similar provision to House bill, with different wording.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

G. Income/Resource Limits, Treatment of Earnings and Other Income

(1) Resource limits

Present law

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment (no provision).

(3) Earnings

Present law

Mandatory disregard: during first 4 months of a job, $120 and one-third, plus child care costs up to a limit; next 8 months, $120 plus child care; after 12 months, $90 plus child care.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment (no provision).

(4) Earned income tax credit

Present law

Mandatory disregard: advance EITC payments must be disregarded.

Repeals mandatory EITC disregard (a provision of AFDC law). States would set policy about treatment of EITC payments by block grant program.

Senate amendment

Provision is identical to House position.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

(5) Child support

Present law

Mandatory disregard: first $50 monthly in child support collections is passed through to the family. In some States, child support payments that fill some or all of the gap between payment and need standard must be ignored.

House bill

In determining a family's eligibility and payment amount under the block grant, a State may not disregard child support collected by the State and distributed to the family.

Senate amendment

States are given the option of disregarding child support. Repeals required disregard of the first $50 monthly in child support collections distributed to the family (a provision of AFDC law).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

(6) Other cash aid

Present law

AFDC benefits may not be paid to a recipient of old-age assistance (predecessor to Supplemental Security Income (SSI) and now available only in Puerto Rico, Guam, and the U.S. Virgin Islands), SSI, or AFDC foster care payments.

House bill

If block grant funds are used to provide payments to a recipient of old-age assistance, SSI, or payments under the Child Protection Block grant, a State may not disregard these other payments in determining a family's eligibility for and payment amount from the block grant.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that public and local agencies must have 60 days to submit comments.

(3) State cost sharing

Present law

State must share in program costs.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

States must continue to spend at least 80 percent of what they expended in FY1994 on AFDC or face a dollar-for-dollar reduction in their basic block grant amount for FY1997–2000.

In order to qualify for additional funding under the contingency fund or additional child care funds, States must continue to spend at least 100 percent of what they expended in FY1994.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with the modification to require a 75 percent maintenance of effort for the basic family assistance block grant, but no maintenance of effort for child care funds under the CCDBG.

(4) Aid to all eligibles

Present law

State must furnish aid to eligible persons with reasonable promptness and give opportunity to make application to all wishing to do so.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

(10) Appeal procedure (for States)

Present Law

Current law (sec. 1116 of the Social Security Act) entitles a State to a reconsideration, which DHHS must grant upon request, of any disallowed reimbursement claim for an item or class of items. The section also provides for administrative and judicial review, upon petition of a State, of DHHS decisions about approval of State plans. At the option of a State, any plan amendment may be treated as the submission of a new plan.

House bill

Repeals reference to Title IV-A in section 1116.

Senate amendment

Requires the Secretary to notify the Governor of a State of any adverse decision or action under Title IV-A, including any decision about the State's plan or imposition of a penalty. Provides for administrative review by a Departmental Appeals Board within DHHS and requires a Board decision within 60 days after an appeal is filed. Provides for judicial review (by a United States district court) within 90 days after a final decision by the Board. The Amendment also repeals the reference to Title IV-A in section 1116.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

I. Quality Control/Audits

Present law

The Secretary must operate a quality control system to determine the amount of Federal matching funds to be disallowed, if any, because of erroneous payments. The law also prescribes penalties for payment error rates above the national average. AFDC payments to States are subject to audits conducted under the Single Audit Act [Ch. 75, Title 31, U.S.C.]

House bill

Family assistance block grants are subject to the Single Audit Act. If an audit conducted under this Act finds that a State has used block grant funds in violation of the law, its grant for the next year is to be reduced by that amount (but no quarterly payment is to be reduced by more than one-fourth).

Senate amendment

Requires a State to offset loss of Federal funds with its own, maintaining the full block grant level. Also, the penalty shall not be imposed if the State proves to the Secretary that the violation was not intentional, and if the State implements an approved corrective action plan. Each State must audit its cash block grant expenditures annually and submit a copy to the State legislature, Treasury Secretary and DHHS Secretary. The audit must be conducted by an entity that is independent from any agency administering activities under title IV-A. Also subject to the Single Audit Act.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill regarding audits to review States' use of funds with the modification that the funds come directly from the Department of Treasury. (See also the Penalties section below on States misusing funds and States failing to meet work requirements.)

J. Data Collection and Reporting

(1) Reporting requirements

Present law

States are required to report the average monthly number of families in each JOBS activity, their types, amounts spent per family, length of JOBS participation and the number of families aided with AFDC/JOBS child care services, the kinds of child care services provided, and sliding fee schedules. States that disallow AFDC for minor mothers in their own living quarters are required to report the number living in their parent's home or in another supervised arrangement. States also must report data (including numbers aided, types of families, how long aided, payments made) for families who receive transitional Medicaid benefits. DHHS collects data about demographic characteristics and financial circumstances of AFDC families from its National Integrated Quality Control System (NIQCS) and publishes State and national information that represents average monthly amounts for a fiscal year. The NIQCS uses monthly samples of AFDC cases.

House bill

States are required, not later than 6 months after the end of each fiscal year, to transmit to the Secretary the following aggregate information on families receiving block grant benefits during the fiscal year:

(a) the number of adults receiving assistance;

(b) the number of children receiving assistance and the average age of children;

(c) the employment status and average earnings of employed adults;

(d) the number of one-parent families in which the sole parent is a widow or widower, is divorced, is separated, or is never married;

(e) the age, race, educational attainment, and employment status of parents;

(f) the average assistance provided to families;

(g) whether, at the time of application, the families or anyone in the families receive benefits from the following public programs:

(l) the number of part-time and full-time job placements made by the program, the number of cases with reduced assistance, and the number of cases closed due to employment.

Senate amendment

States are required to make quarterly reports based on sample case records providing disaggregated data for the quality assurance system, including:

(a) age of adults and children (including pregnant women) in each family;

(b) marital and familial status of each family member (including whether family includes 2 parents and whether child is living with an adult relative other than a parent);

(c) gender, educational level, work experience, and race of each family head;

(d) health status of each family member (including whether any is seriously ill, disabled, or incapacitated and is being care for by another family member);

(e) type and amount of any benefit or assistance received, including amount of and reason for any benefit reduction, and if help is ended, whether this is because of employment, sanction, or time limit;

(f) any benefit or assistance received by a family member with respect to housing, food stamps, job training, or Head Start;

(g) number of months since the family's most recent application for aid, and if application was denied, the reason;

(h) number of times a family applied for and received aid from the cash block grant program and the number of months were received in each "spell" of assistance;

(i) employment status of adults in family (including hours worked and amount earned);

(j) date on which an adult family member began to engage in work, hours worked, work actively performed, amount of child care assistance, if any;

(k) number of persons in each family receiving, and the number not receiving, assistance, and the relationship of each person to the youngest child in the family;

(l) citizenship status of each family member;

(m) housing arrangement of each family member;

(n) amount of unearned income, child support, assets and other financial factors relevant to eligibility;

(o) location in the State of each recipient family; and

(p) any other data determined by Secretary to be necessary for efficient and effective administration.

States are required to report the following aggregated monthly data about families who received temporary family assistance for each month in the calendar quarter preceding the one in which the data are submitted, families applying for assistance in the preceding quarter, and families that became ineligible for aid during that quarter:

(1) number of families,

(2) number of adults in each family,

(3) number of children in each family, and

(4) number of families whose assistance ended because of employment, sanctions, or time limits.

The Secretary shall determine appropriate subsets of the data listed above that a State is required to submit regarding applicant and no-longer eligible families.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, but with some modifications. Specifically, beginning July 1, 1996, each State must collect on a monthly basis, and report to the Secretary on a quarterly basis, the following information on individual families receiving assistance:

(1) the county of residence of the family;

(2) whether a child receiving assistance or an adult in the family is disabled;

(3) the ages of the members of such families;

(4) the number of individuals in the family, and the relationship of each family member to the youngest child in the family;

(5) the employment status and earnings of the employed adult in the family;

(6) the marital status of the adults in the family, including whether such adults are never married, widowed, or divorced;

(7) the race and education status of each adult in the family;

(11) if the adults participated in, and the number of hours per week of participation in, the following activities;

(A) education;

(C) unsubsidized employment;

(D) public sector employment, work experience, or community service;

(E) job search;

(F) job skills training or on-the-job training; and

(G) vocational education;

(12) information necessary to calculate participation rates under section 407;

(13) the type and amount of assistance received under the program, including the amount of and reason for any reduction of assistance (including sanctions);

(14) from a sample of closed cases, whether the family left the program, and if so whether the family left due to

(A) employment;

(B) marriage;

(C) the prohibition set forth in section 408(a)(8);

(D) sanction; or

(E) State policy;

(15) any amount of unearned income received by any member of the family; and

(16) the citizenship of the members of the family.

(2) Authority of States to use estimates

Present law

The National Integrated Quality Control System (above) uses monthly samples of AFDC cases. JOBS regulations require States to submit a sample of monthly unaggregated case record data.

House bill

States may use scientifically acceptable sampling methods to estimate the data elements required for annual reports.

Senate amendment

The Secretary shall provide States with case sampling plans and data collection procedures deemed necessary for statistically valid estimates.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment and clarifies that sampling methods used by States must be approved by the Secretary.

(3) Other State reporting requirements

Present law

Regulations require each State to submit quarterly estimates of the total amount (and the Federal share) of expenditures for AFDC benefits and administration.

Required quarterly reports include estimates of the Federal share of child support collections made by the State; see above for transitional child care and Medicaid reporting requirements.

House bill

The report submitted by the State each fiscal year must also include:

(1) a statement of the percentage of the funds paid to the State that are used to cover administrative costs or overhead;

(2) a statement of the total amount expended by the State during the fiscal year on programs for needy families; and

(3) the number of noncustodial parents in the State who participated in work activities as defined in the bill during the fiscal year.

Senate amendment

The report required by a State for a fiscal year must include:

(1) a statement of the total amount and percentage of Federal funds paid to the State under Title IV-A that are used for administrative costs or overhead;

(2) a statement of the total amount of State funds expended on programs for the needy;

(3) the number of noncustodial parents who participated in work activities during the fiscal year;

(4) the total amount of child support collected by the State IV-D agency on behalf of a family in the cash assistance program;

(5) the total amount spent by the State for child care under Title IV-A, with a description of the types of care, including transitional care for families who no longer receive assistance because of work and "at-risk" care for persons who otherwise might become eligible for assistance; and

(6) the total amount spent by the State for providing transitional services to a family that no longer receive assistance because of employment, along with a description of those services.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment as follows:

(1) follow the House bill regarding administrative funds;

(2) follow the House bill regarding reports of State expenditures;

(3) follow the House bill regarding noncustodial parent participation;

(4) follow the House bill regarding child support (no provision; separate reporting requirement);

(5) follow the House bill regarding child care (no provision; separate reporting requirement); and

(6) follow the Senate amendment regarding reports on transitional services.

K. Reports Required by DHHS Secretary (Sections 103, 106, and 107)

Present law

The law requires the DHHS Secretary to report promptly to Congress the results of State reevaluations of AFDC need standards and payment standards required at least every 3 years. The Secretary is to annually compile and submit to Congress annual State reports on at-risk child care. The Family Support Act required the Secretary to submit recommendations regarding JOBS performance standards by a deadline that was extended.

House bill

The DHHS Secretary must report to Congress within 6 months on the status of automatic data processing systems in the States and on what would be required to produce a system capable of tracking participants in public programs over time and checking case records across States to determine whether some individuals are participating in public programs in more than one State. The report should include a plan for building on the current automatic data processing system to produce a system capable of performing these functions as well as an estimate of the time required to put the system in place and the cost of the system.

The DHHS Secretary must, to the extent feasible, produce and publish for each State, county, and local unit of government for which data have been compiled in the most recent census of population, and for each school district, data about the incidence of poverty. Data shall include, for each school district, the number of children age 5 to 17 inclusive, in families below the poverty level, and, for each State and county for which data have been compiled by the Census Bureau, the number of persons aged 65 or older. Data shall be published for each State, county and local unit of government in 1996 and at least every second year thereafter; and for each school district, in 1998 and at least every second year thereafter. Data may be produced by means of sampling, estimation, or any other method that the Secretary determines will produce current, comprehensive, and reliable information. If reliable data could not be otherwise produced, the Secretary is given authority to aggregate school districts. The DHHS Secretary is to consult with the Secretary of Education in producing data about school districts. If unable to produce and publish the required data, the Secretary must submit a report to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House not later than 90 days before the start of the following year, enumerating each government or school district excluded and giving the reason for the exclusion.

Senate amendment

The Secretary must in cooperation with the States, study and analyze measures of program outcomes (as an alternative to minimum participation rates) for evaluating the success of State block grant programs in helping recipients leave welfare. The study must include a determination of whether outcomes measures should be applied on a State or national basis and a preliminary assessment of the job placement performance bonus established in the Act. The Secretary must report findings to the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Ways and Means not later than September 30, 1998.

The Secretary is to report by Dec. 31, 1997, to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Economic and Educational Opportunities of the House and the Committee on Finance, the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, and the Special Committee on Aging of the Senate setting forth findings of a study on the effects of welfare changes made by the Act on grandparents who are primary caregivers for their grandchildren. The study is to identify barriers to participation in public programs by grandparent caregivers, including inconsistent policies, standards, and definitions of programs providing medical aid, cash, child support enforcement, and foster care.

Not later than March 31, 1998, and each fiscal year thereafter, the Secretary shall send Congress a report describing:

(1) whether States are meeting minimum participation rates and whether they are meeting objectives of increasing employment and earnings of needy families, increasing child support collections, and decreasing out-of-wedlock pregnancies and child poverty;

(2) demographic and financial characteristics of applicant families, recipient families, and those no longer ineligible for temporary family assistance;

(3) characteristics of each State program of temporary family assistance; and

(4) trends in employment and earnings of needy families with minor children.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment as follows:

(1) follow the House bill with regard to the Secretary's report on data processing;

(2) follow the Senate amendment on the report on poverty (no provision);

(3) follow the Senate amendment with regard to the report on alternative outcome measures;

(4) follow the House bill on the report on grandparent caregivers (no provision); and

(5) follow the Senate amendment with regard to the annual report on State process.

L. Research, Evaluations, and National Studies

Present law

The law authorizes $5 million annually for cooperative research or demonstration projects, such as those relating to the prevention and reduction of dependency.

House bill

The Secretary may conduct research on the effects, costs, benefits, and caseloads of State programs funded under this part. The Secretary may assist the States in developing, and shall evaluate (using random assignment to experimental and control groups to the maximum extent feasible), innovative approaches to employing recipients of cash aid under this part. The Secretary may conduct studies of the welfare caseloads of States operating welfare reform programs. The Secretary shall develop innovative methods of disseminating information on research, evaluations, and studies.

Senate amendment

The Secretary may conduct research on the effects, benefits, and costs of operating different State programs of Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, including time limits for eligibility. The research shall include studies on the effects of different programs and the operation of the programs on welfare dependency, illegitimacy, teen pregnancy, employment rates, child well-being, and any other appropriate area. The Secretary may assist States in developing, and shall evaluate innovative approaches for reducing welfare dependency and increasing the well-being of minor children, using random assignments in these evaluations "to the maximum extent feasible."

The Secretary shall develop innovative methods of disseminating information on research, evaluations, and studies, including ways to facilitate sharing of information via computers and other technologies.

The Senate amendment makes a State eligible to receive funding to evaluate its family assistance program if it submits an evaluation design determined by the Secretary to be rigorous and likely to yield credible and useful information. The State must pay 10 percent of the study's cost, unless the Secretary waives this rule. For these State-initiated evaluation studies of the family assistance program (and for costs of operating and evaluating demonstration projects begun under the AFDC waiver process) the amendment authorizes to be appropriated, and appropriates, to total of $20 million annually for 5 years (FYs 1996–2000).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that $15 million is appropriated annually for this purpose. Conferees agree that the Secretary can use funds appropriated for research to pay for evaluations conducted by both governmental and non-governmental organizations.

M. Waivers

Present law

The law authorizes the DHHS Secretary to waive specified requirements of State AFDC plans in order to enable a State to carry out any experimental, pilot, or demonstration project that the Secretary judges likely to assist in promoting the program's objective. (Sec. 1115 of Social Security Act) Some 34 States have received waivers from the Clinton Administration for welfare reforms of their own.

House bill

Repeals AFDC. Also, expressly repeals authority for waiver of specified provisions of AFDC law (Sec. 402, State plan requirements, and Sec. 403, terms of payment to States) for demonstration projects.

Senate amendment

Provides that terms of AFDC waivers in effect, or approved, as of October 1, 1995, will continue until their expiration, except that beginning with FY1996 a State operating under a waiver shall receive the block grant described under Section 403 in lieu of any other payment provided for in the waiver. The amendment gives States the option to terminate waivers before their expiration, but requires that early-ended projects be summarized in written reports. The amendment provides that a State that submits a request to end a waiver by January 1, 1996, or 90 days after adjournment of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of enactment, shall be held harmless for accrued cost neutrality liabilities incurred under the waiver.

The Secretary is directed to encourage any State now operating a waiver to continue the project and to evaluate its result or effect. The amendment allows a State to elect to continue one or more individual waivers.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

N. Studies by the Census Bureau (Sections 103 and 105)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Census Bureau must expand the Survey of Income and Program Participation (SIPP) to evaluate the impact of welfare reforms made by this title on a random national sample of recipients and, as appropriate, other low-income families. The study should focus on the impact of welfare reform on children and families, and should pay particular attention to the issues of out-of-wedlock birth, welfare dependency, the beginning and end of welfare spells, and the causes of repeat welfare spells. $10 million per year for 7 years in entitlement funds are authorized for this study.

Senate amendment

Expansion of SIPP is identical to House provision.

In addition, the Secretary of Commerce shall expand the Census Bureau's question (for the decennial census and mid-decade census) concerning households with both grandparents and their grandchildren so as to distinguish between households in which a grandparent temporarily provides a home and those where the grandparent serves as primary caregiver.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill regarding the expansion of SIPP to evaluate welfare programs and follows the Senate amendment regarding census data on grandparents as caregivers.

O. Services From Charitable, Religious, or Private Organizations (Section 104)

Present law

The Child Care and Development Block Grant Act prohibits use of any financial assistance provided through any grant or contract for any sectarian purpose or activity. In general, it requires religious nondiscrimination, but it does allow a sectarian organization to require employees to adhere to its religious tenets and teachings.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Authorizes States to administer and provide family assistance services (and services under Supplemental Security Income and public housing) through contracts with charitable, religious, or private organizations. Authorizes States to pay recipients by means of certificates, vouchers, or other forms of disbursement that are redeemable with these private organizations. States that religious organizations are eligible, on the same basis as any other private organization, to provide assistance as contractors or to accept certificates and vouchers so long as their programs "are implemented consistent with" the Establishment Clause of the Constitution. Stipulates that any religious organization with a contract to provide welfare services shall retain independence from all units of government and that such a religious organization (or not that redeems welfare certificates) may require employees who render service related to the contract or certificates to adhere to the religious tenets and teaching of the organization and to its rules, if any, regarding use of drugs or alcohol. Provides that, except as otherwise allowed by law, a religious organization administering the program may not discriminate against beneficiaries on the basis of religious belief, or refusal to participate in a religious practice. Requires States to provide an alternative provider for a beneficiary who objects to the religious character of the designated organization. Provides that no funds provided directly to institutions or organizations to provide services and administer programs shall be spent for sectarian worship or instruction, but does not apply this limitation to financial assistance in the form of certificates or vouchers, if the beneficiary may choose where the aid is redeemed.

Conference agreement

This section (section 104) generally follows the Senate amendment. Subsection (j) states that no funds provided directly to institutions or organizations to provide services and administer programs under subsection (a)(1)(A) shall be expended for sectarian worship, instruction, or proselytization. Subsection (a)(1)(A) refers to contracts that States may have with charitable, religious, or private organizations. While Congress recognizes the need to ensure that money provided directly through contracts should not be expended for worship, instruction, or proselytization, Congress does not intend that the prohibition should apply when beneficiaries receive benefits in the form of certificates, vouchers, or other forms of disbursement redeemable with nongovernmental entities. Where the character of the aid goes directly to the ultimate beneficiary in the form of a voucher or certificate, the beneficiary exercises personal choice as to where to use the voucher or certificate, and may or may not choose to redeem it at a religious provider which incorporates worship or instruction in its provision of services. Congress has recognized and allowed such use of vouchers and certificates in the Child Care and Development Block Grant of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 9858 et seq.)

More importantly, a beneficiary's redemption of a government-provided voucher at a religious entity has been determined as nonviolative of the Establishment Clause by the Supreme Court provided that the beneficiary has genuine choice about where to redeem the voucher or certificate. The Court has consistently held that government may confer a benefit on individuals in a manner which allows them to exercise personal choice among similarly qualified institutions, whether public, private non-sectarian, or religious, even when the benefit can be said to indirectly advance religion. Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills School Dist., 113 S. Ct. 2462 (1993) (providing special education services to Catholic student not prohibited by Establishment Clause); Witters v. Washington Dep't of Services for the Blind, 474 U.S. 481 (1986) (upholding a State vocational rehabilitation grant to disabled student choosing to use grant for training as cleric); Mueller v. Allen, 463 U.S. 388 (1983) (upholding State income tax deduction for parents for educational expenses).

Subsection (k) states that nothing in this section shall be construed to preempt State constitutions or statutes which restrict the expenditure of State funds in or by religious organizations. In some States, provisions of the State constitution or a State statute prohibit the expenditure of public funds in or by sectarian institutions. It is the intent of Congress, however, to encourage States to involve religious organizations in the delivery of welfare services to the greatest extent possible. The conferees do not intend that this language be construed to require that funds provided by the Federal government referred to in subsection (a) be segregated and expended under rules different than funds provided by the State for the same purposes; however, States may revise such laws, or segregate State and Federal funds, as necessary to allow full participation in these programs by religious organizations.

In addition, the conference agreement revises Senate language on employment discrimination by religious organizations by stating that the exemption provided under section 702 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 is not affected by participation in or receipt of funds from programs described in subsection (a).

6. TRANSFERS (SECTION 103)

A. Child Support Penalties

Present law

If a State's child support plan fails to comply substantially with Federal requirements, the Secretary is to reduce its AFDC matching funds by percentages that rise for successive violations (Sec. 403(h) of the Social Security Act).

House bill

The provision for child support review penalties—loss of Federal payments of up to 5 percent of the block grant amount—now found in 403(h) of part A of the Social Security Act is retained in the block grant.

Senate amendment

No provision. However, there is a penalty assessed against States for failure to enforce penalties requested by child support agency against recipients who do not cooperate in establishing paternity.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

B. Assistant Secretary for Family Support

Present law

An Assistant Secretary for Family Support, appointed by the President by and with consent of the Senate, is to administer AFDC, child support enforcement, and the Jobs Opportunities and Basic Skills (JOBS) program.

House bill

The provision for an Assistant Secretary for Family Support now found in section 417 of Part A of the Social Security Act is retained in the block grant (as sec. 409), but modified to remove the reference to JOBS (which the House bill repeals).

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

7. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AND THE FOOD STAMP ACT (SECTIONS 108 AND 109)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

These sections make a series of technical amendments that conform the provisions of the House bill with various titles of the Social Security Act and the Food Stamp Act and provide for the repeal of Part F of Title IV (the JOBS program).

Senate amendment

This section makes a series of amendments that conform provisions of the Senate amendment with various titles of the Social Security Act and the Food Stamp Act.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with changes made as appropriate.

8. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO OTHER LAWS (SECTION 110)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

This section makes a series of technical amendments to conform provisions of the House bill to the Internal Revenue Code, the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1987, the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, and the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments Act of 1988.

Senate amendment

Section 107 makes a series of amendments that conform provisions of the Senate amendment to the Food Stamp Act, the Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act, the National School Lunch Act, and the Child Nutrition Act.

Section 108 makes a series of amendments that conform provisions of the Senate amendment to the Unemployment Compensation Amendments of 1976, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, the House and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, the Social Security Amendments of 1967, the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments Act of 1988, the Higher Education Act of 1965, the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Applied Technology Education Act, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, Public Law 99-88, the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the Wagner-Peyser Act, the Job Training Partnership Act, the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981, the Family Support Act of 1988, the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, the Immigration and Nationality Act, the Head Start Act, and the School-to-Work Opportunities Act of 1994.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with changes made as appropriate.

9. CONTINUED APPLICATION OF CURRENT STANDARDS UNDER MEDICAID PROGRAM (SECTION 114)

Present law

States must continue Medicaid (or pay premiums for employer-provided health insurance) for 6 months to a family that loses AFDC eligibility because of hours of, or income from, work of the caretaker relative, or because of loss of the earned income disregard after 4 months of work. States must offer an additional 6 months of medical assistance, for which it may require a premium payment if the family's income after child care expenses is not above the poverty guideline. For extended medical aid, families must submit specified reports. States must continue Medicaid for 4 months to those who lose AFDC because of increased child or spousal support.

House bill

Although AFDC would be repealed, its standards would continue to be used by the Medicaid program. States would have to give Medicaid to families who would have received AFDC if it still existed as in effect on March 7, 1995. The frozen AFDC rules would govern Medicaid eligibility for both recipients and non-recipients of the new block grant funds, including those categorically ineligible for cash benefits.

Senate amendment

Same as House provision except for date at which AFDC rules would be "frozen" (June 1, 1995, rather than March 7, 1995). If an AFDC waiver (as of June 1, 1995) affects Medicaid eligibility, the State has the option to continue to apply the waiver in regard to Medicaid after the date when the waiver otherwise would end.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement changes both the House bill and the Senate amendment because of pending changes in Medicaid legislation. In conforming with this legislation, conferees agree that States will determine Medicaid eligibility for recipients of block grant assistance.

10. EFFECTIVE DATES (SECTION 116)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The amendments and repeals made by this title take effect on October 1, 1995. The authority to reduce assistance for certain families that include a child whose paternity is not established will begin 1 year after the effective date or, at the option of the State, 2 years after the effective date.

Amendments made by Title I (Block Grants for Temporary Assistance for Needy Families) shall not apply to powers, duties, functions, rights, claims, penalties, or obligations applicable to aid, or services provided (under AFDC) before the effective date of the Act. Nor shall amendments of the bill apply to administrative actions and proceedings commenced or authorized before the effective date of the bill.

Senate amendment

AFDC is repealed effective October 1, 1995. Family assistance block grant provisions also take effect October 1, 1995 (except for penalties, most of which are effective October 1, 1996), but expire on September 30, 2000. A State may continue to operate its AFDC program for 9 months, until June 30, 1996. If it does so, its FY 1996 cash block grant under the new program shall be reduced by the amount of Federal matching funds received for that year for AFDC expenditures.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree that States must begin their block grant program under this title by 1 October, 1996. However, States have the option of initiating their block grant program at any time after the date of enactment.

11. MISCELLANEOUS

A. County Authority for Demonstration Projects

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires the DHHS Secretary and the Agriculture Secretary jointly to enter into negotiations with all counties having a population greater than 500,000 that desire to conduct a demonstration project in which: (1) the county shall have the authority and duty to administer the operation of the family assistance program as if the county were considered a State; (2) the State shall pass through directly to the county the portion of the block grant that the State determines is attributable to the residents of the county; and (3) the project shall last 5 years.

To be eligible: (1) a county already must be administering the Title IV-A program; (2) must represent less than 25 percent of the State's total welfare caseload; and (3) the State must have more than one county with a population of greater than 500,000.

Not later than 56 months after the end of a county demonstration project, the two Secretaries shall send a report to Congress that includes a description of the project, its rules, and innovations (if any).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

B. Collection of Overpayments from Federal Tax Refunds

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires the Treasury Secretary, upon notification from a State that it has overpaid a former recipient of temporary cash assistance and has attempted unsuccessfully to collect the overpayment, to collect the sum from Federal tax refunds.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

C. Tamper-Proof Social Security Card (Section 111)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires the Commissioner of Social Security to develop a prototype of a counterfeit-resistant social security card. The card must be made of a durable, tamper-resistant material such as plastic or polyester, employ technologies that provide security features, and be developed so as to provide individuals with reliable proof of citizenship of legal resident alien status. The Commissioner is to report to Congress on the cost of issuing a tamper-proof card for all persons over a 3-, 5-, and 10-year period. Copies of the report, along with a facsimile of the prototype card, shall be submitted to the Committees on Ways and Means and Judiciary of the House and the Committees on Finance and Judiciary of the Senate within one year of enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment except that funding is not made through Title II of the Social Security Act.

D. Disclosure of Receipt of Federal Funds (Section 112)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires disclosure of specified public funds received by 501(c) organizations, which are non-profit and tax-exempt. When a 501(c) organization that accepts Federal funds under the Work Opportunity Act makes any communication that intends to promote public support or opposition to any governmental policy (Federal, State or local) through any broadcasting station, newspaper, magazine, outdoor advertising facility, direct mailing, or any other type of general public advertising, the communication must state: "This was prepared and paid for by an organization that accepts taxpayer dollars".

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

E. Projects to Expand Job Opportunities for Certain Low-Income Individuals (JOLI) (Section 113)

Present law

The Family Support Act of 1988 (Sec. 505) directed the Secretary to enter into agreement with between 5 and 10 nonprofit organizations to conduct demonstrations to create job opportunities for AFDC recipients and other low-income persons. For these projects, $6.5 million was authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, 1990–1992.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Strikes the word "demonstration" from the description of these projects and converts them to grant status. The provision requires the Secretary to enter into agreements with nonprofit organizations to conduct projects that create job opportunities for recipients of family assistance and other persons with income below the poverty guideline. The sum of $25 million annually is authorized for these projects.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

F. Demonstration Projects To Expand Use of Schools

Present law

The 21st Century Community Learning Centers Act (established by P.L. 103-382) makes available funds directly to rural or inner-city schools, or consortia of them, to act as centers for providing education and human resources services. Services allowed include: literacy education, parenting skills education, employment counseling, training and placement. The Elementary and Secondary Education Act includes a program called "Extend Time for Learning and Longer School Year," which support local educational agencies' efforts to lengthen learning time. Grantees may engage other community members in these efforts.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Secretary of Education is required to make grants to not more than 5 States for demonstration grants to increase the number of hours when public school facilities are available for use. Schools selected must have a significant percentage of students receiving family assistance benefits. The longer hours are intended to enable volunteers and parents or professionals paid from other sources to teach, tutor, coach, organize, advise, or monitor students. Grants are intended also to make school facilities available for clubs, civic associations, Boy and Girl Scouts and other groups. The amendment authorizes $10 million annually (FYs 1996-2000) for grants plus $1 million annually for administration by the Secretary.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (no provision).

G. Secretarial Submission of Legislative Proposal for Technical and Conforming Amendments (Section 115)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Not later than 90 days after enactment of this Act, the Secretary must submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a legislative proposal providing for technical and conforming amendments.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

TITLE II. SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME

SUBTITLE A—ELIGIBILITY RESTRICTIONS

1. DENIAL OF SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME BENEFITS BY REASON OF DISABILITY TO DRUG ADDICTS AND ALCOHOLICS

A. In General

Present law

Individuals whose drug addiction or alcoholism is a contributing factor material to their disability are eligible to receive SSI cash benefits for up to three years if they meet SSI income and resource requirements. These recipients must have a representative payee, must participate in an approved treatment program when available and appropriate, and must allow their participation in a treatment program to be monitored. Medicaid benefits continue beyond the 3-year limit, as long as the individual remains disabled, unless the individual was expelled from SSI for failure to participate in a treatment program.

House bill

Under the House provision, an individual is not considered disabled if drug addiction or alcoholism is a contributing factor material to his or her disability. Individuals with drug addiction and/or alcoholism who cannot qualify based on another disabling condition will not be eligible for SSI benefits.

Senate amendment

Identical to House bill.

Conference agreement

This section was deleted from the conference agreement on H.R. 4 because it was included in H.R. 2684, The Senior Citizens' Right to Work Act.

B. Representative Payee Requirements

Present law

SSI law requires that the SSI payments of individuals whose drug addiction or alcoholism is a contributing factor material to their disability must be made to another individual, or an appropriate public or private organization (i.e., the individual's "representative payee") for the use and benefit of the individual or eligible spouse.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Under the Senate amendment, if a disabled person also has an alcoholism or drug addiction condition (as determined by the Commissioner of Social Security), their SSI checks must be sent to a representative payee.

Conference agreement

This section was deleted from the conference agreement on H.R. 4 because it was included in H.R. 2684, The Senior Citizens' Right to Work Act.

C. Treatment Referrals for Individuals With an Alcoholism or Drug Addiction Condition

Present law

Federal law requires SSI recipients whose drug addiction or alcoholism is a contributing factor material to their disability to undergo appropriate treatment, if it is available.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment requires the Commissioner of Social Security to refer to the appropriate State agency administering the State plan for substance abuse services any disabled SSI recipient who is identified as having an alcoholism or drug addiction condition. Any individual who refuses to accept the referred services without good cause is no longer eligible for SSI benefits.

Conference agreement

This section was deleted from the conference agreement on H.R. 4 because it was included in H.R. 2684, The Senior Citizens' Right to Work Act.

D. Conforming Amendments

E. Supplemental Funding for Alcohol and Substance Abuse Treatment Programs

Present law

SSI cash benefits are limited to 3 years for recipients whose drug addiction or alcoholism is a contributing factor material to their disability. These individuals must undergo "appropriate substance abuse treatment." While the Social Security Administration currently contracts with agencies for referral, monitoring and reporting of compliance with treatment, it does not pay for treatment. Medicaid benefits are to continue beyond the 3-year limit, as long as the individual remains disabled, unless the individual was expelled from SSI for noncompliance with treatment.

House bill

For four years beginning with FY 1997, $100 million of the savings realized from denying cash SSI payments and Medicaid coverage to individuals whose drug addiction or alcoholism is a contributing factor material to their disability will be targeted to drug treatment and drug abuse research. Each year, $95 million will be expended through the Federal Capacity Expansion Program (CEP) to expand drug treatment availability and $5 million will be allocated to the National Institute on Drug Abuse to be expended solely on the medication development project to improve drug abuse and drug treatment research.

Senate amendment

For two years beginning with FY 1997, $50 million will be spent to fund additional drug (including alcohol) treatment programs and services through Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Block Grant.

Conference agreement

This section was deleted from the conference agreement on H.R. 4 because it was included in H.R. 2684, The Senior Citizens' Right to Work Act.

F. Effective Dates

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

This section of the bill becomes effective on October 1, 1995, and applies with respect to months beginning on or after that date.

Senate amendment

Generally, changes apply to applicants for benefits for months beginning on or after the date of enactment. An individual receiving benefits on the date of enactment whose eligibility would end would continue to be eligible for benefits until January 1, 1997. The Commissioner of Social Security shall notify individuals losing eligibility within three months of the date of enactment.

In addition, in the case of an individual with an alcoholism or drug addiction condition who is receiving SSI benefits on the date of enactment, the representative payee requirement will apply on or after the first continuing disability review occurring after enactment. For recipients with an addiction who are over the age of 65, the Commissioner will determine appropriate representative payee requirements.

Conference agreement

This section was deleted from the conference agreement on H.R. 4 because it was included in H.R. 2684, The Senior Citizens' Right to Work Act.

Reapplication

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Individuals receiving SSI benefits on the date of enactment who are notified of their termination of eligibility and who desire to reapply for benefits must do so within four months after the date of enactment. The Commissioner of Social Security will determine within one year after the date of enactment the eligibility of individuals who reapply.

Conference agreement

This section was deleted from the conference agreement on H.R. 4 because it was included in H.R. 2684, The Senior Citizens' Right to Work Act.

2. DENIAL OF SSI BENEFITS FOR 10 YEARS TO INDIVIDUALS FOUND TO HAVE FRAUDULENTLY MISREPRESENTED RESIDENCE IN ORDER TO OBTAIN BENEFITS SIMULTANEOUSLY IN 2 OR MORE STATES (SECTION 201)

See description in section 103 of title 1 of the conference agreement.

SUBTITLE B—BENEFITS FOR DISABLED CHILDREN

1. DEFINITION AND ELIGIBILITY RULES (SECTION 211)

A. Definition of Childhood Disability

Comparable severity repealed

Present law

A needy individual under age 18 is determined eligible for SSI "if he suffers from any medically determinable physical or mental impairment of comparable severity" with that of an adult considered work disabled and otherwise eligible for SSI benefits.

House bill

The "comparable severity" test in statute for determining disability of children (defined as individuals under 18) is repealed.

Senate amendment

Similar to the House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

Disability definition

Present law

There is no definition of childhood disability in the statute. Under current disability evaluation procedures, to be found disabled, a child must have a medically determinable physical or mental impairment that substantially reduces his or her ability to independently and effectively engage in age-appropriate activities. This impairment must be expected to result in death or to last for a continuous period of not less than 12 months.

House bill

Eligibility, as determined by the Commissioner of Social Security, for cash benefits or new medical or non-medical services described below will be based solely on: (1) meeting the non-disability-related requirement for eligibility; (2) meeting or equalling the current Listing of Impairments set forth in the Code of Federal Regulations (i.e., the Listing which is currently in regulations is to be codified in statute); and (3) being a disabled SSI recipient in the month prior to this provision's effective date or being in a hospital, skilled nursing facility, residential treatment facility, intermediate care facility for the mentally retarded, or otherwise would be placed in such a facility if the child were not receiving personal assistance necessitated by the impairment. Personal assistance refers to assistance with activities of daily living such as eating and toileting.

Senate amendment

Adds a new statutory definition of childhood disability. An individual under the age of 18 is considered disabled for the purposes of this section if the individual has a medically determinable physical or mental impairment, which results in marked and severe functional limitations, and which can be expected to result in death or which has lasted or can be expected to last for a continuous period of not less than 12 months.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with technical modification and provides that the Commissioner of Social Security shall submit for review to the committees of jurisdiction in the Congress any final regulation with supporting documentation pertaining to the eligibility of individuals under age 18 for SSI benefits at least 45 days before the effective date of such regulation.

By this definition, the conferees intend that only needy children with severe disabilities be eligible for children's SSI and that the Listing and other disability determination regulations as modified by the conference agreement properly reflect the severity of disability contemplated by the statutory definition. In those areas of the Listing that involve domains of functioning, the conferees expect no less than market limitations in no fewer than two domains or extreme limitations in at least one domain as the standard for qualification. The conferees are also aware that the Social Security Administration uses the term "severe" to often mean "other than minor" in an initial screening procedure for disability determination and in other places. The conferees, however, use the term "severe" in its common sense meaning.

The conferees do not intend to suggest by this definition of childhood disability that every child need be especially evaluated for functional limitations, or that this definition creates a supposition for any such examination. Under current procedures for writing individual listings, level of functioning is an explicit consideration in deciding which impairment, with what medical or other findings, are of sufficient severity to be included in the Listing. Nonetheless, the conferees do not intend to limit the use of functional assessments and functional information, if reflecting sufficient severity and are otherwise appropriate.

B. Changes to Childhood SSI Regulations

Reliance on "Listing of Impairments"

Present law

Under the disability determination process for children, individuals whose impairments do not meet or equal the "Listing of Impairments" in Federal regulations are subject to an "individualized Functional Assessment (IFA)". This assessment examines whether the child can engage in age-appropriate activities effectively. If the child cannot, he or she is determined disabled.

House bill

The Commissioner of Social Security must annually report to Congress on the Listings and recommend any needed revisions. Individualized functional assessments are no longer grounds for determination of disability.

Senate amendment

The Commissioner of Social Security shall discontinue the individualized functional assessment for children set forth in the Code of Federal Regulations.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conferees agree that a significant amount of the growth of the children's SSI program resulted from regulations issued in 1991 by the Social Security Administration establishing the individualized functional assessment which liberalized program eligibility criteria beyond Congressional intent. Children with modest conditions or impairments were made eligible for SSI due to the individualized functional assessment, and therefore should not be eligible for SSI benefits.

Multiple references to "Maladaptive Behavior" eliminated

Present law

Under the disability determination process for children, the Social Security Administration first determines if a child meets or equals the Listings of Impairments. Under the Listings that relate to mental disorders, maladaptive behavior may be scored twice, in domains of social functioning and of personal/behavior functioning.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires the Commissioner of Social Security to eliminate references in the Listing to maladaptive behavior among medical criteria for evaluation of mental and emotional disorders in the domain of personal/behavioral function.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

C. Medical Improvement Review Standard as it Applies to Individuals Under the Age of 18

This section in the legislative language contains technical modifications to the medical improvement review standard based on the new definition of childhood disability.

D. Amount of Benefits

Present law

A child who is determined to be disabled and who is eligible on the basis of his income and resources shall be paid benefits. If the child lives at home, the parents' financial resources are deemed available to the child. If the same child is institutionalized, after the first month away home only the child's own financial resources are deemed to be available for the child's care. The child may then qualify for a reduced ("personal needs allowance") SSI benefit and for Medicare coverage. Because of these "deeming" rules, some children who could have been cared for at home might remain in institutions because, if they were to return home, they would lose Medicaid benefits. Medicaid "waivers" allow States to disregard the deeming rule, provide Medicaid coverage, and pay for support services to help families keep children at home.

House bill

Children may be eligible for cash SSI payments in one of three circumstances:

(1) if a child who is currently (defined as during the month prior to the first month for which this provision takes effect) receiving cash SSI payments by reason of disability will continue to be eligible for cash SSI benefits if the child has an impairment that meets or equals an impairment specified in the Listing of Impairments. Children receiving cash benefits under the grandfather provision whose financial eligibility is suspended would continue to receive cash benefits if financial eligibility is restored;

(2) for all other children, a child may only receive cash SSI payments if the child has an impairment which meets or equals an impairment specified in the Listings of Impairments cited above, and is either in a hospital, skilled nursing facility, residential treatment facility, intermediate care facility for the mentally retarded, or otherwise would be placed in such a facility if the child were not receiving personal assistance necessitated by the impairment. Personal assistance refers to assistance with activities of daily living such as eating and toiling; and

(3) if a child who is overseas as a dependent of a member of the U.S. Armed Forces and who is eligible for block grant services but not eligible for cash benefits under the new criteria shall be eligible for cash benefits. Cash benefits cease when the child returns to the United States.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows a modified version of the House bill. Once an eligible child is determined to meet the definition of disability, the amount of the individual's cash benefit will be based on whether the child meets the newly developed criteria for needing personal assistance enabling the child to remain with their family at home. This criteria is as follows:

For a child under age 6—such individual has a medical impairment that severely limits the individual's ability to function in a manner appropriate to individuals of the same age and who without special personal assistance would require specialized care outside the individual's home; or

For a child age 6 or over—such individual requires personal care assistance with: (a) at least two activities of daily living, (b) continual 24-hour supervision or monitoring to avoid causing injury or harm to self or others, or (c) the administration of medical treatment; and who without such assistance would require full-time or part-time specialized care outside the individual's home.

The conferees have provided a different definition of the eligibility for children under age 6 and over age 6 because of the differing expectations of age appropriate behavior for children above and below this age. As described below, the conferees have requested the Commissioner of Social Security to undertake a study on ways to improve these definitions and the disability determination process.

Children with disabilities meeting this criteria will receive 100 percent of the benefit amount provided by current law. Disabled children who do not meet this criteria will receive seventy-five percent of the benefit amount provided by current law. The conferees note that the SSI benefit under either tier is very generous. In 1995, the average SSI benefit for a child recipient is $5,040. Seventy-five percent of that benefit would be $3,780. Both the maximum children's SSI benefit or seventy-five percent of the maximum benefit is greater than the maximum 1995 AFDC benefit for a family of three in many States.

The conferees acknowledge that many families of disabled children incur expenses beyond those by families of nondisabled children. However, the conferees agree that the extra expenses related to a child's disability vary widely depending on the nature and degree of disability and the availability of Federal, State, and local health care and/or disability programs. In order to reduce the inequity of the current system which provides one benefit level to all families without regard to additional disability-related financial needs, the conferees agree to establish a two-tiered benefit system. The higher tier is intended for families of children with the most severe disabilities who require full or part-time personal assistance which would prevent a parent from working full-time or which would require the presence of a personal assistance provider.

The conferees also believe that Congress should investigate whether the unmet needs of families of disabled children could be better and more efficiently met through services, such as mental health treatment or purchase of items of assistive technology, rather than cash payments. In the twenty-three years since the SSI program was created, substantial new Federal programs have been authorized to assist children with disabilities, including Federal, State and local funding of special education and expansion of Medicaid. The impact of these programs on cash needs of children with disabilities merits further investigation by Congress.

E. Effective Dates and Other Changes

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Changes apply to benefits for months beginning ninety or more days after enactment, without regard to whether regulations have been issued. Recipients of SSI cash benefits during the month of enactment who would lose eligibility under the House bill may continue to receive SSI benefits for up to 6 months.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment changes apply to applicants for months beginning on or after the date of enactment, without regard to whether regulations have been issued. However, the Commissioner must issue necessary regulations within two months of enactment. For child SSI recipients who were eligible for SSI on the date of enactment but who would lose eligibility under the Senate amendment, the changes would not take effect until January 1, 1997. The Commissioner is to redetermine the eligibility of these persons within one year of enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with modification that the effective date for the two-tiered benefit system is January 1, 1997, for current recipients and new applications. The conferees agreed to require the Commissioner to report to Congress within 180 days regarding the progress made in implementing the SSI children's provisions.

Notice

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Not later than one month after the date of enactment, the Commissioner must notify individuals whose eligibility for SSI benefits will terminate.

Senate amendment

Within three months of enactment, the Commissioner must notify individuals whose eligibility for SSI will terminate.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

New provision for administrative funds for the Social Security Administration

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conferees recognize that implementation of the SSI provisions by the Social Security Administration is a big job and have provided $300 million to assist the agency meeting its obligations. The conferees are very mindful of the problems encountered by the Social Security Administration in the early 1980s in conducting a large number of redeterminations and continuing disability reviews, and strongly urge the Commissioner to conduct the redeterminations and continuing disability reviews required in this bill in an orderly and careful manner.

Block grants to States for children with disabilities

Entitlement to grants

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Each State that meets the requirements listed below for FY 1997 or later years shall be entitled to receive a grant equal to the State's allotment for that fiscal year. The Commissioner of Social Security will make block grants to States for the purpose of providing specified medical and non-medical benefits for children who have an impairment which meets or equals an impairment specified in the Listing of Impairments. Grants are an entitlement to eligible States on behalf of qualifying children, not an entitlement to any such child.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

Requirements

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Each State must establish a program to provide block grant services. The State will submit to the Commissioner an application for the grant. In the application, the State agrees it must spend grant funds to provide authorized services designed to meet the unique needs of qualifying children. The application must also contain information, agreements, and assurances required by the Commissioner. In providing authorized services, States will make every reasonable effort to obtain payment for the services from other Federal or State programs that provide such services. States will expend the grant only to the extent that payments from other programs are not available.

In order to receive a block grant under this section, the State must agree to maintain non-Federal spending for any purposes designed to meet the needs of qualifying children with physical or mental impairments. States have discretion to select the purposes for which the State expends non-Federal amounts, within the purpose of providing for the needs of qualifying children. The Consumer Price Index will be used to adjust for inflation in judging whether the State meets the maintenance of effort requirements in future years.

No child who has an impairment which meets or equals an impairment specified in the Listing of Impairments will be denied the opportunity to apply for services and to have his or her case assessed to determine the child's service needs.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

Authority of State

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

The following decisions are in the discretion of a State:

(1) which authorized services to provide;

(2) who among qualifying children receives services; and

(3) the number of services provided a qualifying child and their duration.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

Authorized services

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

The Commissioner shall issue regulations designating the purposes for which grants may be spent by States. The Commissioner must ensure that services on the list are designed to meet the unique needs of qualifying children that arise from their physical and mental impairments, that both medical and non-medical services are included, and that cash assistance is not available through the block grant.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

General provisions

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Necessary regulations are to be issued, but payments under the block grant must begin not later than January 1, 1997, regardless of whether final rules have been issued.

The value of the authorized services provided through the block grant cannot be taken into account in determining eligibility for, or the amount of, benefits or services under any Federal or federally-assisted program. For the purposes of Medicaid, each qualifying child shall be considered to be a recipient of Supplemental Security Income benefits under this title.

States are encouraged to use an existing delivery system to administer block grant services.

States that do not participate in offering block grant services are not permitted to use social security numbers in the administration of any tax, public assistance, driver's license or motor vehicle registration law. (Because of the extreme duress this would impose on States, this is regarded as effectively a "requirement.")

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

Definitions

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

A State's "Allotment" of block grant funds equals the product of 75 percent of the average cash SSI benefit in the State and the number of children in the State receiving non-cash SSI benefits under this section.

"Authorized Service" means each service authorized by the Commissioner.

A "Qualifying Child" means an individual under 18 years of age who is eligible for cash benefits under this title by reason of disability; or an individual under 18 years of age who is eligible for SSI non-cash benefits as described above. The Commissioner will determine whether individuals meet the criteria to the eligible for block grant services.

2. Eligibility redeterminations and continuing disability reviews (section 212)

A. Continuing Disability Reviews Relating to Certain Children

Present law

Federal law requires that SSI recipients be subject to a Continuing Disability Review (CDR) at least once every 3 years, except for recipients whose impairments are judged to be permanent. The Commissioner is required to conduct periodic CDRs of at least 100,000 disabled SSI recipients per year for a period of 3 years (i.e., FY 1996–1998) and report to Congress on CDRs for disabled SSI recipients no later than October 1, 1998.

House bill

In addition to the provisions of current law, at least once every 3 years the Commissioner must conduct CDRs for SSI benefits of children receiving benefits. For children who are eligible for benefits and whose medical condition is not expected to improve, the requirement to perform such reviews does not apply

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill, with minor differences in wording. At the time of review the parent or guardian must present evidence demonstrating that the recipient is and has been receiving appropriate treatment for his or her disability.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with modification requiring evidence of needed treatment for continued representative payee status.

B. Disability Eligibility Redeterminations Required for SSI Recipients Who Attain 18 Years of Age

Present law

Current law also specifies that the Commissioner must reevaluate under adult disability criteria the eligibility of at least one-third of SSI children who turn age 18 in each of the fiscal years 1996, 1997, and 1998 (the CDR must be completed before these children reach age 19) and report to Congress no later than October 1, 1998, on CDRs for disabled children.

House bill

The eligibility for all children qualifying for SSI benefits must be redetermined using the adult criteria within one year after turning 18 years of age. The review will be considered a substitute for any other review required under the changes made in this section.

Not later than October 1, 1998, the Commissioner of Social Security must submit to the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance a report on disability reviews for children enrolled in SSI.

The "minimum number of reviews" and the "sunset" provisions of section 207 of the Social Security Independence and Program Improvements Act of 1994 are eliminated.

Senate amendment

Same as the House bill with differences in wording. Like the House bill, the Senate amendment repeals section 207 of the Social Security Independence and Program Improvements Act of 1994.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill with modification that the Commissioner does not have to submit a report to Congress on disability reviews for SSI children.

C. Continuing Disability Review Required for Low Birth Weight Babies

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

A review for continuing disability must be performed for all children qualifying for SSI due to low birth weight when the child has received benefits for 12 months.

Senate amendment

A review must be conducted 12 months after the birth of a child whose low birth weight is a contributing factor to the child's disability. At the time of review, the parent or guardian must present evidence demonstrating that the recipient is and has been receiving appropriate treatment for his or her disability.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with modification requiring evidence of needed treatment for continued representative payee status.

D. Effective Date

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

This section applies to benefits for months beginning ninety or more days after enactment, regardless of whether regulations have been issued.

Senate amendment

Applies to benefits for months beginning on or after the date of enactment, regardless of whether regulations have been issued.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

3. Additional accountability requirements (section 213)

A. Disposal Of Resources for Less Than Fair Market Value

Present law

No provision. There is a transfer of assets provision in Medicaid law that is similar to H.R. 4 provision (Sec. 1917(c) of the Social Security Act).

House bill

The House bill delays eligibility for any child applicant whose parents or guardians, in order to qualify a child for benefits, dispose of assets for less than fair market value within 36 months of the date of application. The provision stipulates that any assets in a trust in which the child (i.e., parent or representative payee) has control shall be considered assets of the child and subject to the 36-month "look-back" rule. The delay (in months) is equal to the amount of assets divided by the SSI standard benefit.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with technical modifications.

B. Treatment of Assets Held in Trust

This section is included in the law as a result of technical changes submitted by the Social Security Administration.

C. Requirement to Establish Account

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

At the request of the representative payee (i.e., the parent), the Commissioner of Social Security may pay any lump sum payment for the benefit of a child into a dedicated savings account for the purpose of covering the costs of needs related to the child's disability and/or increasing the child's independence. The dedicated savings account could only be used to purchase education and job skills training, special equipment or housing modifications related to the child's disability, and appropriate therapy and rehabilitation. The funds in these accounts would not be counted as resources in determining SSI eligibility. This provision would take effect upon enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with modification requiring the dedicated savings account (instead of it being optional at the request of the representative payee), expanding the list of allowable expenses, and requiring the Commissioner to establish a system for accountability monitoring.

Conforming amendments

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

The House bill makes a number of conforming amendments, reflecting the addition of non-cash SSI benefits as described above.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate Amendment (i.e. no provision).

Improvements to disability evaluations for children

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment directs the Commissioner of Social Security, within sixty days of enactment, to issue a request for comments in the Federal Register regarding improvements in the disability evaluation and determination procedures for children under age 18. The Commissioner must review the comments and issue regulations implementing changes within 18 months after enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (i.e., no provision).

Temporary eligibity for cash benefits for poor disabled children residing in States applying alternative income eligibility standards under medicaid

Present law

States generally are required to provide Medicaid coverage for recipients of SSI. However, States may use more restrictive eligibility standards for Medicaid than those for SSI if they were using those standards on January 1, 1972 (before implementation of SSI). States that have chosen to apply at least one more restrictive standard are known as "section 209(b)" States, after the section of the Social Security Amendments of 1972 (P.L. 92-603) that established the option. These States may vary in their definition of disability, or in their standards related to income or resources. There are 12 section 209(b) States: Connecticut, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Missouri New Hampshire, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, and Virginia.

House bill

The House bill provides for temporary eligibility for cash SSI benefits (through the end of FY 1996) for children who live in States that apply alternative income eligibility standards under Medicaid (also known as "209(b)" States).

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision).

4. REDUCTION OF CASH BENEFITS PAYABLE TO INSTITUTIONALIZED CHILDREN WHOSE MEDICAL COSTS ARE COVERED BY PRIVATE INSURANCE (SECTION 214)

Present law

Federal law stipulates that when an individual enters a hospital or other medical institution in which more than half of the bill is paid by the Medicaid program, his or her monthly SSI benefit standard is reduced to $30 per month. This personal needs allowance is intended to pay for small personal expenses, with the cost of maintenance and medical care provided by the Medicaid program.

House bill

Cash SSI payments to institutionalized children would be reduced for those whose medical costs are covered by private insurance.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Additional accountability requirements for parents or guardians

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment requires a disabled child's representative payee (usually the parent) to document expenditures. These expenditures would be subject to increased review by the Social Security Administration. Effective for benefits paid after enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (i.e., no provision).

5. REGULATIONS (SECTION 215)

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

The Commissioner of Social Security and the Secretary of HHS will prescribe necessary regulations within three months after enactment of this Act.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Examination of mental listing used to determine eligibility of children for SSI benefits by reason of disability

Present law

Section 202 of the Social Security Independence and Program Improvements Act of 1994 established a Childhood Disability Commission to study the desirability and methods of increasing the extent to which benefits are used in the effort to assist disabled children in achieving independence and engaging in substantial gainful activity. The Commission was also charged with examining the effects of the SSI program on disabled children and their families.

House bill

The Childhood Disability Commission must review the mental listing used by the Social Security Administration to determine child SSI eligibility. The Commission should conduct this investigation to ensure that the criteria in these listings are appropriate and that SSI eligibility is limited to children with serious disabilities for whom Federal assistance is necessary to improve the child's condition or quality of life.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision) due to the Childhood Disability Commission having completed their final report.

Limitation on payments to Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands and Guam under programs of aid to the aged, blind, or disabled

See description in section 108 of title I of the conference agreement.

SUBTITLE C—STATE SUPPLEMENTATION PROGRAMS

1. REPEAL OF MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT REQUIREMENT APPLICABLE TO OPTIONAL STATE PROGRAMS FOR SUPPLEMENTATION OF SSI BENEFITS (SECTION 221)

Present law

Since the beginning of the SSI program, States have had the option to supplement (with State funds) the Federal SSI payment. The purpose of section 1618 was to encourage States to pass along to SSI recipients the amount of any Federal SSI benefit increase. Under section 1618, a State that is found to be not in compliance with the "pass along/maintenance of effort provision" is subject to loss of its Medicaid reimbursements. Section 1618 allows States to comply with the "pass along/maintenance of effort" provision by either maintaining their State supplementary payment levels at or above 1983 levels or by maintaining total annual expenditures for supplementary payments (including any Federal cost-of-living adjustment) at a level at least equal to their prior 12-month period, provided the State was in compliance for that period. In effect, section 1618 requires that once a State elects to provide supplementary payments it must continue to do so. [Sec. 1618 of the Social Security Act]

House bill

The House bill repeals the maintenance of effort requirements (Sec. 1618) applicable to optional State programs for supplementation of SSI benefits effective date of enactment.

Senate amendment

Similar to the House bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with modification that the effective date is the date of enactment.

Limited Eligibility of Noncitizens for SSI Benefits

See description in title IV of the conference agreement.

SUBTITLE D—STUDIES REGARDING SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME PROGRAM

1. ANNUAL REPORT ON SSI (SECTION 231)

Present law

To date, the Department of Health and Human Services and now the Social Security Administration have collected, compiled, and published annual and monthly SSI data, but Federal law does not require an annual report on the SSI program.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment requires the Commissioner of Social Security to prepare and provide to the President and the Congress an annual report on the SSI program, which includes specified information and data. The report is due May 30 of each year.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

2. STUDY OF DISABILITY DETERMINATION PROCESS (SECTION 232)

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Within 90 days of enactment, the Commissioner must contract with the National Academy of Sciences or another independent entity to conduct a comprehensive study of the disability determination process for SSI and SSDI. The study must examine the validity, reliability and consistency with current scientific standards of the Listings of Impairments cited above.

The study must also examine the appropriateness of the definitions of disability (and possible alternatives) used in connection with SSI and SSDI; and the operation of the disability determination process, including the appropriate method of performing comprehensive assessments of individuals under age 18 with physical or mental impairments.

The Commissioner must issue interim and final reports of the findings and recommendations of the study within 18 months and 24 months, respectively, from the date of contract for the study.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

3. GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE STUDY (SECTION 233)

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment requires the General Accounting Office to study and report on the impact of title II of the Senate amendment on the SSI program by January 1, 1998.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with modification that the study also include extra expenses incurred by families of children receiving SSI that are not covered by other Federal, State, or local programs.

SUBTITLE E—NATIONAL COMMISSION ON THE FUTURE OF DISABILITY

1. ESTABLISHMENT (SECTION 241)

2. DUTIES (SECTION 242)

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Commission must study all matters related to the nature, purpose and adequacy of all Federal programs for the disabled, and especially SSI and SSDI.

The Commission must examine: projected growth in the number of individuals with disabilities and the implications for program planning; possible performance standards for disability programs; the adequacy of Federal rehabilitation research and training; and the adequacy of policy research available to the Federal government and possible improvements.

The Commission must submit to the President and the proper Congressional committees recommendations and possible legislative proposals effecting needed program changes.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

3. MEMBERSHIP (SECTION 243)

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Commission is to be composed of 15 members, appointed by the President and Congressional leadership. Members are to be chosen based on their education, training or experience, with consideration for representing the diversity of individuals with disabilities in the U.S.

The Comptroller General must serve as an ex officio member of the Commission to advise on the methodology of the study. With the exception of the Comptroller General, no officer or employee of any government may serve on the Commission.

Members are to be appointed not later than 60 days after enactment. Members serve for the life of the Commission, which will be headquartered in D.C. and meet at least quarterly.

The Senate amendment includes a number of specific requirements on the Commission regarding quorums, the naming of chairpersons, member replacement, and benefits.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with modification deleting the Comptroller General as a ex officio member and deleting the prohibition against officer or employee of any government being appointed to serve on the Commission. The conferees added that the Commission membership will also reflect the general interest of the business and taxpaying community, both of which are often impacted by Federal disability policy.

4. STAFF AND SUPPORT SERVICES (SECTION 244)

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

SUBTITLE F—RETIREMENT AGE ELIGIBILITY

1. ELIGIBILITY FOR SSI BENEFITS BASED ON SOCIAL SECURITY RETIREMENT AGE (SECTION 251)

Present law

The SSI program guarantees a minimum level of cash income to all aged, blind, or disabled persons with limited resources. The SSI program defines "aged" as persons age 65 and older.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment deletes references to age 65 and instead defines as "aged" those persons who reach "retirement age" as defined by the Social Security program. The Social Security "retirement age"—the age at which retired workers receive benefits that are not reduced for "early retirement"—gradually will rise from 65 to 67. It will do so in two steps. First, the retirement age will increase by 2 months for each year that a person was born after 1937, until it reaches age 66 for those born in 1943 (i.e., those who attain age 66 in 2009). Second, it will again increase by 2 months for each year that a person was born after 1954 until it reaches age 67 for those born after 1959.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

TITLE III. CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT

SUBTITLE A—ELIGIBILITY FOR SERVICES; DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS

1. REFERENCES (SECTION 300)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Any reference in this title expressed in terms of an amendment to or repeal of a section or other provision is made to the Social Security Act.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

2. STATE OBLIGATION TO PROVIDE CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT SERVICES (SECTION 301)

Present law

States are required to establish paternity for children born out of wedlock if they are recipients of AFDC or Medicaid, and to obtain child and spousal support payments from noncustodial parents of children receiving AFDC, Medicaid benefits, or foster care maintenance payments. States must provide child support collection or paternity determination services to persons not otherwise eligible if the person applies for services. Federal law requires States to cooperate with other States in establishing paternity (if necessary), locating absent parents, collecting child support payments, and carrying out other child support enforcement functions.

House bill

States must provide services, including paternity establishment and establishment, modification, or enforcement of support obligations, for children receiving benefits under part A (Temporary Assistance for Needy Families block grant-TANF), part B (child protection block grant), Medicaid, and any child of an individual who applies for services. States must enforce support obligations with respect to children in their caseload and the custodial parents of such children. States must also make child support enforcement services available to individuals not residing within the State on the same terms as to individuals residing within the State. The provision also makes minor technical amendments to SSA section 454.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision with one exception: instead of reference to part B as in House bill, reference is to part E—foster care and adoption assistance.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment except the House recedes by agreeing that States be required to provide child support services only to children actually receiving foster care payments.

3. DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD SUPPORT COLLECTIONS (SECTIONS 302 AND 374)

A. Distribution of Collected Support

Present law

To receive AFDC benefits, a custodial parent must assign to the State any right to collect child support payments. This assignment covers current support and any arrearages, and lasts as long as the family receives AFDC. Federal law requires that child support collections be distributed as follows: First, up to the first $50 in current support is paid to the AFDC family (a "disregard" that does not affect the family's AFDC benefit or eligibility status). Second, the Federal and State governments are reimbursed for the AFDC benefit paid to the family in that month. Third, if there is money left, the family receives it up to the amount of the current month's child support obligation. Fourth, if there is still money left, the State keeps it to reimburse itself for any arrearages owed to it under the AFDC assignment (with appropriate reimbursement of the Federal share of the collection to the Federal government). If no arrearages are owed the State, the money is used to pay arrearages to the family; such moneys are considered income under the AFDC program and would reduce the family's AFDC benefit.

House bill

To receive funds from the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) block grant, custodial parents must assign to the State their right to child support payments. The bill ends the $50 child support disregard to (TANF) families. Families receiving cash assistance—States are given the option of passing the entire child support payments through to families. If States elect this option, they must pay the Federal share of the collection to the Federal government. Families that formerly received cash assistance—Current child support payments go to the family. Payments on arrearages that accrued before or after the custodial parent received cash assistance are paid to the family first if the family leaves welfare. Only after all arrearages owed to the custodial parent and children have been repaid are arrearages owed to the State and Federal government repaid. Payments on arrearages that accrued while the family received assistance must be retained by the State. The State is required to keep the State share of the collected amount, and pay to the Federal government the Federal share of the amount collected (to the extent necessary to reimburse amounts paid to the family as cash assistance). As a general rule, States must pay to the Federal government the Federal share of child support collections for parents on the Temporary Family Assistance program. This share is calculated using the State's Medicaid match rate in effect in 1995 or in subsequent years, whichever is greater. Families that never received cash assistance—All child support payments go directly to the family.

Senate amendment

Any rights to child support that were assigned to the State before the effective date of the amendment are to remain so assigned. Gives States the option of requiring TANF applicants and recipients to assign to the State their rights to child support payments. The amendment eliminates references (in both the TANF block grant title of the amendment and the CSE title) to the $50 child support disregard, but does not explicitly eliminate the $50 child support disregard. Families receiving cash assistance—States are given the option of passing the entire child support payment through to families. If States elect this option, they must pay the Federal share of the collection to the Federal government. Families that formerly received cash assistance—Current child support payments go to the family. Payments on arrearages that accrued after the custodial parent left welfare are paid to the family. With respect to payments on arrearages that accrued before or while the family received assistance, the State may retain all or part of the State share, and if the State does so, it must retain and pay to the Federal Government the Federal share (to the extent the amount retained does not exceed the cash assistance paid to the family). The Federal share is calculated using the State's Medicaid match rate in effect in 1995 or in subsequent years, whichever is greater. Families that never received cash assistance—All child support payments go directly to the family. In addition, in the case of a family receiving cash assistance from an Indian tribe, the child support collection is to be distributed according to the agreement specified in the State plan.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement modifies the House bill and Senate amendment as follows: (1) the $50 pass-through is ended; (2) beginning October 1, 1997, arrearages that accumulate during the period after the family leaves welfare are paid to the family prior to any payments to the State for assigned support; and (3) beginning October 1, 2000, arrearages that accumulated during the period before the custodial parent went on welfare are also paid to the family prior to any payments to the State for assigned support. (This includes pre-welfare arrearages that were assigned to the State on or after October 1, 1997 but that were not collected prior to October 1, 2000.) An exception is made for any collections through the tax refund intercept program, which are paid to the State first, up to the amount of the remaining assigned support, prior to any payments to the family.

When fully implemented in 2000, the new order of assignment and distribution of arrearage payments, according to whether collections are made via the tax intercept or through any other method, will be as follows:

Tax intercept: First, post-welfare arrearages to State; Second, pre-welfare arrearages to State; Third, post-welfare arrearages to family; and Fourth, pre-welfare arrearages to family.

Other methods: First, post-welfare arrearages to family; Second, pre-welfare arrearages to family; Third, post-welfare arrearages to State; and Fourth, pre-welfare arrearages to State.

Conferees also agreed that if the amount of pre-welfare arrearages paid to the family exceeded the amount saved by a given State by ending the $50 passthrough and by other methods of improving collections contained in this legislation, the Federal government will pay that State an amount equal to the difference between pre-welfare arrearage payments to family and State savings caused by this legislation.

To further improve child support collections, conferees agree to close a loophole in the bankruptcy code that allows courts to dismiss child support debts that accumulated before a child support order was legally established (see Section 374).

B. Continuation of Service for Families Ceasing to Receive Assistance

Present law

Federal law requires States to continue providing child support enforcement services to AFDC, Medicaid, and foster care families who no longer qualify for AFDC benefits on the same basis as in the case of those who receive benefits or services, except that no application or request for services is required.

House bill

When families leave the TANF program, States are required to continue providing child support enforcement services to them subject to the same conditions and on the same basis as in the case of individuals who receive assistance.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. Effective Date

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The effective date for provisions relating to distribution of support collected for families who formerly received cash assistance is October 1, 1995. For all others it is October 1, 1999.

Senate amendment

The effective date for distribution of support collected for families receiving cash assistance is October 1, 1999. The effective date for the clerical amendments and provisions relating to the distribution of child support collected for families who formerly received cash assistance or who never received cash assistance is October 1, 1995.

Conference agreement

The effective date for ending the $50 pass-through is October 1, 1996 or sooner at State option. The effective date for implementing the new distribution rules applying to post-welfare arrearages is October 1, 1997; for pre-welfare arrearages, the effective date is October 1, 2000.

4. PRIVACY SAFEGUARDS (SECTION 303)

Present law

Federal law limits the use or disclosure of information concerning recipients of Child Support Enforcement Services to purposes connected with administering specified Federal welfare programs.

House bill

States must implement safeguards against unauthorized use or disclosure of information related to proceedings or actions to establish paternity or to enforce child support. These safeguards must include prohibitions on release of information where there is a protective order or where the State has reason to believe a party is at risk of physical or emotional harm from the other party. This provision is effective October 1, 1997.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

5. RIGHTS TO NOTIFICATION AND HEARING (SECTION 304)

Present law

Most States have procedural due process requirements with respect to wage withholding. Federal law requires States to carry out withholding in full compliance with all procedural due process requirements of the State.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Parties to child support cases under Title IV-D must receive notice of proceedings in which child support is established or modified and must receive a copy of orders establishing or modifying child support within 14 days of issuance. Individuals served by the child support program must also have access to a fair hearing or other complaint procedures. These rules and procedures become effective on October 1, 1997.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement is a compromise between the Senate and House provisions. The House recedes on the Senate requirement that parties be informed of hearings; the Senate recedes on the requirement for hearings in certain cases.

6. STATE CASE REGISTRY (SECTION 311)

A. Contents

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

D. Payment Records

Present Law

Federal law requires that wage withholding be administered by a public agency capable of documenting payments of support and tracking and monitoring such payments.

House bill

Each case record will contain the amount of support owed under the order and other amounts due or overdue, any amounts that have been collected and distributed, the birth date of any child for whom the order requires the provision of support, and the amount of any lien imposed by the State.

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

E. Updating and Monitoring

Present law

Federal law requires that child support orders be reviewed and adjusted, as appropriate, at least once every 3 years.

House bill

The State agency operating the registry will promptly establish and maintain and regularly update case records in the registry with respect to which services are being provided under the State plan. Updating will be based on administrative actions and administrative and judicial proceedings and orders relating to paternity and support, as well as information obtained from comparisons with Federal, State, and local sources of information, information on support collections and distributions, and any other relevant information.

7. COLLECTION AND DISBURSEMENT OF SUPPORT PAYMENTS (SECTION 312)

A. State Disbursement Unit

Present law

No provision. But States may provide that, at the request of either parent, child support payments be made through the child support enforcement agency or the agency that administers the State's income withholding system regardless of whether there is an arrearage. States must charge the parent who requests child support services a fee equal to the cost incurred by the State for these services, up to a maximum of $25 per year.

House bill

By October 1, 1998, State child support agencies are required to operate a centralized, automated unit for collection and disbursement of payments on child support orders enforced by the child support agency. The specifics of how States will establish and operate their State Disbursement Unit must be outlined in the State plan.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

B. Operation

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The State Disbursement Unit must be operated directly by the State agency, by two or more State agencies under a regional cooperative agreement, or by a contractor responsible directly to the State agency.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. Linking of Local Disbursement Units

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The State Disbursement Unit may be established by linking local disbursement units through an automated information network. The Secretary must agree that the system will not cost more nor take more time to establish than a centralized system. In addition, employers shall be given one location per State to which income withholding is sent.

Senate amendment

Similar provision except that whereas the House requires only that the linked local system not cost more or take more time to establish than the single State system, the Senate adds the condition that the local system also cannot take more time to operate.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate provision allowing States to establish their State Disbursement Unit by linking local disbursement units only if linking units does not cost more money nor take more time to establish and to operate.

D. Required Procedures

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Disbursement Unit will be used to collect and disburse support payments, to generate orders and notices of withholding to employers, to keep an accurate identification of payments, to promptly distribute money to custodial parents or other States, and to furnish parents with a record of the current status of support payments. The Unit shall use automated procedures, electronic processes, and computer-driven technology to the maximum extent feasible, efficient, and economical.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

E. Timing of Disbursements

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Disbursement Unit must distribute all amounts payable within 2 business days after receiving money and identifying information from the employer or other source of periodic income, if sufficient information identifying the payee is provided.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except permits the retention of arrearages in the case of appeals until they are resolved.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment except that the House recedes to the Senate requirement that States be allowed to retain arrearages in the case of appeals until they are resolved.

F. Use of Automated System

Present law

No provision.

House bill

State must use their automated system to facilitate collection and disbursement including at least:

(1) transmission of orders and notices to employers within 2 days after receipt of the withholding notice;

(2) monitoring to identify missed payments of support; and

(3) automatic use of enforcement procedures when payments are missed.

Senate amendment

The conference agreement follows the House and the Senate.

8. STATE DIRECTORY OF NEW HIRES (SECTION 313)

A. State Plan Requirement

Present law

No provision.

House bill

State plans must include the provision that by October 1, 1997, States will operate a Directory of New Hires (as outlined below).

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

B. Establishment

Present law

No provision.

House bill

States are required to establish a State Directory of New Hires to which employers and labor organizations in the State must furnish a report for each newly hired employee, unless reporting could endanger the safety of the employee or compromise an ongoing investigation or intelligence mission as determined by the head of an agency.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with the clarification that States that already have new hire reporting laws may continue to follow the provisions of their own law until October 1, 1997, at which time States must conform to Federal law.

C. Employer Information

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Employers must furnish to the State Directory of New Hires the name, address, and Social Security number of every new employee and the name and identification number of the employer. Multistate employers may report to the State in which they have the most employees.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, but allows multistate employers to report to the single State they designate. The employer must notify the DHHS Secretary as to the name of the designated State.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment except that the House receedes to the Senate provision allowing multistate employers to report to the State of their choice. Employers must notify the Secretary of the name of the designated State.

D. Timing of Report

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Employers must report new hire information within 15 days of the hire or on the date the employee first receives wages.

Senate amendment

Employer must report new hire information within 30 days of the hire or if the employer reports by magnetic or electronic means, the employer can report by the first business day of the week following the date on which the employee first receives wages.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree that employers must report new hire information within 20 days of the date of hire.

Employers that report new hires electronically or by magnetic tape must file twice per month; reports must be separated by not less than 12 days and not more than 16 days.

E. Reporting Format and Method

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The report required in this section will be made on a W-4 form or the equivalent, and can be transmitted magnetically, or by first class mail.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, but only allows the report to be filed on a W-4 form, not the equivalent.

Conference agreement

The conferees agree to follow both the House and Senate provisions except that the Senate recedes to the House provision allowing employers, at their option, to use an equivalent form. The decision of which reporting method to use is entirely up to employers.

F. Civil Money Penalties on Noncomplying Employers

Present law

In general, no provision.

Section 1128 of the Social Security Act is an antifraud provision which excludes individuals and entities that have committed fraud from participation in medicare and State health care programs. Section 1128A pertains to civil monetary penalties and describes the appropriate procedures and proceedings for such penalties.

House bill

An employer failing to make a timely report is subject to a $25 fine for each unreported employee. There is also a $500 penalty on employers for every employee for whom they do not transmit a W-4 form if, under the laws of the State, there is shown to be a conspiracy between the employer and the employee to prevent the proper information from being filed.

The House bill makes several but not all provisions of section 1128 applicable to employers that violate reporting requirements.

Senate amendment

States have the option of setting a civil money penalty which shall be not less than $25 or $500 if, under State law, the failure is the result of a conspiracy between the employer and employee. The Senate amendment does not make any provisions of section 1128 applicable to employers.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both the House and Senate provisions except that the House recedes to the Senate provision of making the penalties a State option. The application of penalties from section 1128 is dropped.

G. Entry of New Hire Information

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

New hire information must be entered in the State data base within five business days of receipt from employer.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate requirement of requiring States to enter New Hire information in their data base within five business days.

H. Information Comparisons

Present law

No provision.

House bill

By October 1, 1997, each State Directory of New Hires must conduct automated matches of the Social Security numbers of reported employees against the Social Security numbers of records in the State Case Registry being enforced by the State agency and report the name, Social Security number, and employer identification number on matches to the State child support agency.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires comparisons to begin by October 1, 1998, rather than 1997.

Conference agreement

Conferees agreed to follow the House and Senate provisions but to compromise on the date by which comparisons must begin by adopting a May 1, 1998, effective date.

I. Transmission of Information

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Within two business days of the entry of data in the registry, the State must transmit a withholding order directing the employer to withhold wages in accord with the child support order. Within four days, the State Directory of New Hires must furnish employee information to the National Directory of New Hires for matching with the records of other State case registries. The State Directory of New Hires must also report quarterly to the National Directory of New Hires information on wages and unemployment compensation taken from the quarterly report to the Secretary of Labor now required by Title III of the Social Security Act.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires State Directory to report to the National Directory within two, rather than four, days.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement is to follow the House and Senate provisions and to compromise on the reporting date by allowing States three days to report to the National Directory of New Hires.

J. Other Uses of New Hire Information

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The State child support agency must use the new hire information for purposes of establishing paternity as well as establishing, modifying, and enforcing child support obligations. New hire information (pursuant to section 1137 of the Social Security Act) must also be disclosed to the State agency administering the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, Medicaid, Unemployment Compensation, Food Stamp, SSI, and territorial cash assistance programs for income eligibility verification, and to State agencies administering unemployment and workers' compensation programs to assist determinations of the allowability of claims.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires State and local government agencies to be included in quarterly wage reporting unless the agency performs intelligence or counterintelligence functions and it is determined that wage reporting could endanger the safety of the employee or compromise an ongoing investigation or intelligence mission.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement allows the House and Senate provisions except that the House recedes to the Senate provision allowing State and local government agencies to exempt employees doing intelligence or counterintelligence work whose safety might be compromised by the reporting.

9. AMENDMENTS CONCERNING INCOME WITHHOLDING (SECTION 314)

Present law

Since November 1, 1990, all new or modified child support orders that were being enforced by the State's child support enforcement agency have been subject to immediate income withholding. If the noncustodial parent's wages are not subject to income withholding (pursuant to the November 1, 1990 provision), such parent's wages would become subject to withholding on the date when support payments are 30 days past due. Since January 1, 1994, the law has required States to use immediate income withholding for all new support orders, regardless of whether a parent has applied for child support enforcement services. There are two circumstances in which income withholding does not apply: (1) one of the parents demonstrates and the court or administrative agency finds that there is good cause not to do so, or (2) a written agreement is reached between both parents which provides for an alternative arrangement. States must implement procedures under which income withholding for child support can occur without the need for any amendment to the support order or for any further action by the court or administrative entity that issued the order. States are also required to implement income withholding in full compliance with all procedural due process requirements of the State, and States must send advance notice to each nonresident parent to whom income withholding applies (with an exception for some State that had income withholding before enactment of this provision that met State due process requirements). States must extend their income withholding systems to include out-of-State support orders.

House bill

States must have laws providing that all child support orders issued or modified before October 1, 1996, which are not otherwise subject to income withholding, will become subject to income withholding immediately if arrearages occur, without the need for judicial or administrative hearing. State law must also allow the child support agency to execute a withholding order through electronic means and without advance notice to the obligor. Employers must remit to the State disbursement unit income withheld within two working days after the date such amount would have been paid or credited to the employee.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, but requires all child support orders which are not part of the State IV-D program to be processed through the State disbursement unit. In addition, States must notify noncustodial parents that income withholding has commenced and inform them of procedures for contesting income withholding.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House and the Senate provisions except that the House recedes to the Senate provision requiring all child support orders which are not part of the State IV-D program to be processed through the State disbursement unit. In addition, States must notify noncustodial parents that income withholding has commenced and inform them of procedures for contesting income withholdng.

10. LOCATOR INFORMATION FROM INTERSTATE NETWORKS (SECTION 315)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

All State and the Federal Child Support Enforcement agencies must have access to the motor vehicle and law enforcement locator systems of all States.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

11. EXPANSION OF THE FEDERAL PARENT LOCATOR SERVICE (SECTION 316)

A. Expanded Authority to Locate Individuals and Assets

Present law

The law requires that the Federal Parent Locator Service (FPLS) be used to obtain and transmit information about the location of any absent parent when that information is to be used for the purpose of enforcing child support.

House bill

The purposes of the Federal Parent Locator Service are expanded. For the purposes of establishing parentage, establishing support orders or modifying them, or enforcing support orders, the Federal Parent Locator Service will provide information to locate individuals who owe child support or against whom an obligation is sought or to whom such an obligation is owed. Information in the FPLS includes Social Security number, address, name and address of employer, and wages and employee benefits (including information about health care coverage).

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except clarifies current law by stating that information from the Federal Parent Locator Service can be used to enforce visitation orders. Senate also allows FPLS to contain and provide information on assets and debts.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement is similar to both the House bill and the Senate amendment. The agreement clarifies the statute so that nonresident parents are given access to information from the FPLS if these requests are made through a court or through the State child support agency. In addition, States are required to treat requests for information from nonresident parents on the same basis and with the same priority as requests for information from the resident parent.

B. Reimbursements

Present law

Federal law requires that any department or agency of the United States must be reimbursed for costs incurred for providing requested information to the FPLS.

House bill

The Secretary is authorized to set reasonable rates for reimbursing Federal and State agencies for the cost of providing information to the FPLS and to set reimbursement rates that State and Federal agencies that use information from the FPLS must pay to the Secretary.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. New Components of FPLS

(1) Federal case registry of child support orders

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The House bill establishes within the FPLS an automated registry known as the Federal Case Registry of Child Support Orders. The Federal Case Registry contains abstracts of child support orders and other information specified by the Secretary (such as names, Social Security numbers or other uniform identification numbers, State case identification numbers, wages or other income, and rights to health care coverage) to identify individuals who owe or are owed support, or for or against whom support is sought to be established, and the State which has the case. States must begin reporting this information in accord with regulations issued by the Secretary by October 1, 1998.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

(2) National directory of new hires

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The bill establishes within the FPLS a National Directory of New Hires containing information supplied by State Directories of New Hires, beginning October 1, 1996. When fully implemented, the Federal Directory of New Hires will contain identifying information on virtually every person who is hired in the United States. In addition, the FPLS will contain quarterly data supplied by the State Directory of New Hires on wages and Unemployment Compensation paid. The Secretary of the Treasury must have access to information in the Federal Directory of New Hires for the purpose of administering section 32 of the Internal Revenue Code and the Earned Income Credit.

Senate amendment

The Senate provision is similar to the House provision with two exceptions:

(1) the Senate amendment includes the requirement that the information for the National Directory of New Hires must be entered within 2 days of receipt; and

(2) the Senate amendment requires the DHHS Secretary to maintain within the National Directory of New Hires a list of multistate employers that choose a State to send their report to and the name of the State so designated.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree to follow both the House bill and Senate amendment except that the House recedes on the points of difference. Thus, the National Directory must enter new information within 2 days and the Secretary must maintain a list of the States to which multistate employers send their new hire information.

D. Information Comparisons and Other Disclosures

Present law

Upon request, the Secretary must provide to an "authorized person" (i.e., an employee or attorney of a child support, a court with jurisdiction over the parties involved, the custodial parent, legal guardian, or attorney of the child) the most recent address and place of employment of any nonresident parent if the information is contained in the records of the Department of Health and Human Services, or can be obtained from any other department or agency of the United States or of any State. The FPLS also can be used in connection with the enforcement or determination of child custody, visitation, and parental kidnapping. Federal law requires the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of Health and Human Services to enter into an agreement to give the FPLS prompt access to wage and unemployment compensation claims information useful in locating a noncustodial parent or his employer.

House bill

The Secretary must verify the accuracy of the name, Social Security number, birth date, and employer identification number of individuals in the Federal Parent Locator Service with the Social Security Administration. The Secretary is required to match data in the National Directory of New Hires against the child support order abstracts in the Federal Case Registry at least every 2 working days and to report information obtained from matches to the State child support agency responsible for the case within 2 days. The information is to be used for purposes of locating individuals to establish paternity, and to establish, modify, or enforce child support orders. The Secretary may also compare information across all components of the FPLS to the extent and with the frequency that the Secretary determines will be effective. The Secretary will share information from the FPLS with several potential users including State agencies administering the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program, the Commissioner of Social Security (to determine the accuracy of Social Security and Supplemental Security Income), and researchers under some circumstances.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

E. Fees

Present law

"Authorized persons" who request information from FPLS must be charged a fee.

House bill

The Secretary must reimburse the Commissioner of Social Security for costs incurred in performing verification of Social Security information and to States for submitting information on New Hires. States or Federal agencies that use information from FPLS must pay fees established by the Secretary.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

F. Restriction on Disclosure and Use

Present law

Federal law stipulates that no information shall be disclosed if the disclosure would contravene the national policy or security interests of the United States or the confidentiality of Census data.

House bill

Information from the FPLS cannot be used for purposes other than those provided in this section, subject to section 6103 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

G. Information Integrity and Security

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary must establish and use safeguards to ensure the accuracy and completeness of information from the FPLS and restrict access to confidential information in the FPLS to authorized persons and purposes.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

H. Quarterly Wage Reporting

Present law

Requires the Secretary of Labor to provide prompt access for the DHHS Secretary to wage and unemployment compensation claims information and data maintained by the Labor Department or State employment security agencies.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Each department in the U.S. shall submit the name, Social Security number, and wages paid the employee, on a quarterly basis to the FPLS. Quarterly wage reporting shall not be filed for a Federal or State employee performing intelligence or counter-intelligence functions if it is determined that filing such a report could endanger the employee or compromise an ongoing investigation.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

I. Conforming Amendments

Present law

No provision.

House bill

This section makes several conforming amendments to Titles III and IV of the Social Security Act and the Federal Unemployment Tax Act.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except amends section 303(h) to require State unemployment insurance agencies to report quarterly wage information to the Secretary of HHS or suffer financial penalties, while the House bill amends section 303(a) and simply requires quarterly reports to the Secretary of HHS.

Conference agreement

Conferees agreed to follow both the House and Senate provisions but to follow the Senate amendment by requiring State unemployment insurance agencies to file quarterly wage reports with the Secretary or pay penalties.

J. Authorized Person for Information Regarding Visitation Rights

Present law

FPLS can be used to provide information to authorized individuals and agencies making or entering a child custody order (see Sec. 463 of Social Security Act).

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Expands functions of FPLS by requiring that information be made available to nonresident parents for purposes of seeking or enforcing child visitation orders.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate amendment on this provision but with the agreement that nonresident parents cannot obtain information directly from the FPLS. Rather, they must present their request through the courts or through the State child support agency. In addition, the agreement requires State child support agencies to treat requests for information from nonresident parents on the same basis and with the same priority as requests from resident parents.

Conferees also agree to add a provision to section 6103(l) of the Internal Revenue Code to allow State child support agencies to share information on the address, social security number, and tax intercept results with private agents working under contract with the State agency.

12. COLLECTION AND USE OF SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBERS FOR USE IN CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT (SECTION 317)

Present law

Federal law requires that in the administration of any law involving the issuance of a birth certificate, States must require each parent to furnish their Social Security number for the birth records. The State is required to make such numbers available to child support agencies in accordance with Federal or State law. States may not place Social Security numbers directly on birth certificates.

House bill

States must have laws requiring that Social Security numbers be placed on applications for professional licenses, commercial drivers licenses, and occupational licenses, marriage licenses, and in the records for divorce decrees, child support orders, and paternity determination or acknowledgment orders. Individuals who die will have their Social Security number placed in the records relating to the death and recorded on the death certificate. There are several conforming amendments.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except gives States the option of not including Social Security numbers on applications for licenses and bars the placement of Social Security numbers on marriage licenses.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment except that the House recedes to the Senate requirements that States have the option of not including Social Security numbers on applications and that States be barred from placing Social Security numbers on marriage licenses.

SUBTITLE C—STREAMLINING AND UNIFORMITY OF PROCEDURES

13. ADOPTION OF UNIFORM STATE LAWS (SECTION 321)

Present law

States have several options available for pursuing interstate child support cases including direct income withholding, interstate income withholding, and long-arm statutes which require the use of the court system in the State of the custodial parent. In addition, States use the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA) and the Revised Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (RURESA) to conduct interstate cases. Moreover, Federal law imposes a Federal criminal penalty for the willful failure to pay past-due child support to a child who resides in a State other than the State of the obligor. In 1992, the National Conference of Commissioners on State Uniform Laws approved a new model State law for handling interstate child support cases. The new Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA) is designed to deal with desertion and nonsupport by instituting uniform laws in all 50 States that limit control of a child support case to a single State. This approach ensures that only one child support order from one court or child support agency will be in effect at any given time. It also helps to eliminate jurisdictional disputes between States that are impediments to locating parents and enforcing child support orders across State lines. As of March, 1995, 23 States had enacted UIFSA, 15 verbatim and 8 with minor changes.

House bill

By January 1, 1997, all States must have enacted the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act (UIFSA) and have the procedures required for its implementation in effect. States are required to apply UIFSA to any case involving an order established or modified in one State that is sought to be modified in another State. States must also have a new provision on long-arm statutes and petitioning for modifications of orders, and are required to recognize as valid any method of service of process used in another State that is valid in that State.

Senate amendment

Similar to the House provision, except permits but does not require States to apply UIFSA to all interstate cases.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement is that States must adopt UIFSA by January 1, 1998. The House recedes to the Senate, however, by allowing States flexibility in deciding which specific interstate cases are pursued by using UIFSA and which cases are pursued using other methods of interstate enforcement.

14. IMPROVEMENTS TO FULL FAITH AND CREDIT FOR CHILD SUPPORT ORDERS (SECTION 322)

Present law

Federal law requires States to treat past-due support obligations as final judgments that are entitled to full faith and credit in every State. This means that a person who has a support order in one State does not have to obtain a second order in another State to obtain support due should the debtor parent move from the issuing court's jurisdiction. P.L. 103-383 restricts a State court's ability to modify a support order issued by another State unless the child and the custodial parent have moved to the State where the modification is sought or have agreed to the modification.

House bill

The provision clarifies the definition of a child's home State, makes several revisions to ensure that full faith and credit laws can be applied consistently with UIFSA, and clarifies the rules regarding which child support orders States must honor when there is more than one order.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both the House and Senate provisions but the House recedes on "more than one court."

15. ADMINISTRATIVE ENFORCEMENT IN INTERSTATE CASES (SECTION 323)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

States are required to have laws that permit them to send orders to and receive orders from other States without registering the underlying order unless the enforcement action is contested by the obligor on the grounds of mistake of fact or invalid order. The transmission of the order itself serves as certification to the responding State of the arrears amount and of the fact that the initiating State met all procedural due process requirements. No court action is required or permitted by the responding State. In addition, each responding State must, without requiring the case to be transferred to their State, match the case against its data bases, take appropriate action if a match occurs, and send the collections, if any, to the initiating State. States must keep records of the number of requests they receive, the number of cases that result in a collection, and the amount collected. States must respond to interstate requests within five days.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

16. USE OF FORMS IN INTERSTATE ENFORCEMENT (SECTION 324)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary must issue forms that States must use for income withholding, for imposing liens, and for issuing administrative subpoenas in interstate cases. The forms must be issued by June 30, 1996, and States must be using the forms by October 1, 1996.

Senate amendment

Requires the DHHS Secretary to establish an advisory committee which must include State child support directors, and not later than June 30, 1996, after consultation with the advisory committee, to issue forms that States must use for income withholding, for imposing liens, and for issuing administrative subpoenas in interstate cases. States must be using the forms by October 1, 1996.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree to follow both the House and Senate provisions with a compromise on requiring the Secretary to consult with States. Rather than forming an advisory committee, the conference agreement requires the Secretary to consult with States before issuing the interstate forms. It is the intention of conferees to facilitate timely issuance of the forms but also to mandate that the Secretary work closely with State child support directors in developing the forms.

17. STATE LAWS PROVIDING EXPEDITED PROCEDURES (SECTION 325)

A. Administrative Action by State Agency

Present law

States must have procedures under which expedited processes are in effect under the State judicial system or under State administrative processes for obtaining and enforcing support orders and for establishing paternity.

House bill

States must adopt a series of procedures to expedite both the establishment of paternity and the establishment, enforcement, and modification of support. These procedures provide for:

(1) ordering genetic testing in appropriate cases;

(2) entering a default order upon a showing of service of process and any other showing required by State law to establish paternity if the putative father refuses to submit to genetic testing and to establish or modify a support order when a parent fails to appear for a hearing;

(3) issuing subpoenas to obtain information necessary to establish, modify or enforce an order, with appropriate sanctions for failure to respond to the subpoena;

(4) obtaining access to records including: records of other State and local government agencies, law enforcement records, and corrections records, including automated access to records maintained in automated data bases;

(5) directing the parties to pay support to the appropriate government entity;

(6) ordering income withholding;

(7) securing assets to satisfy arrearages by intercepting or seizing periodic or lump sum payments from States or local agencies; these payments include Unemployment Compensation, workers' compensation, judgements, settlements, lottery winnings, assets held by financial institutions, and public and private retirement funds; and

(8) increasing automatically the monthly support due to include amounts to offset arrears.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires States to include the following additional procedures:

(1) requiring all entities in the State (including for-profit, nonprofit, and governmental employers) to provide information on employment, compensation and benefits of any employee or contractor in response to a request from the State IV–D agency;

(2) obtaining access to a variety of public and private records including: vital statistics, State and local tax records, real and personal property, occupational and professional licenses and records concerning ownership and control of corporations, partnerships and other business entities, employment security records, public assistance records, motor vehicle records, corrections records, customer records of public utilities and cable TV companies, and records of financial institutions;

(3) imposing liens to force the sale of property and distribution of proceeds;

(4) requiring financial institutions (subject to the limitation on liabilities arising from affording such access) to provide information held by them on individuals who owe or are owed child support (or against or with respect to whom a support obligation is sought) to State child support agencies; and

(5) requiring that due process safeguards be follows.

The amendment does not include the House provision regarding default orders in paternity cases upon a showing of service of process.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate by including the five additional expedited procedures in the list of State requirements. The conference agreement also includes the House provision regarding default orders in paternity cases upon a showing of service of process.

B. Substantive and Procedural Rules

Present law

Federal regulations provide a number of safeguards, such as requiring that the due process rights of the parties involved be protected.

House bill

States must follow a series of procedural rules that apply to all of the expedited procedures outlined in the preceding section:

(1) Locator Information and Notice—requires parties in paternity and child support actions to file and update information about identity, address, and employer with the tribunal and with the State Case Registry upon entry of the order. The tribunal can deem due process requirements for notice and service of process to be met in any subsequent action upon delivery of written notice to the most recent residential or employer address filed with the tribunal.

(2) Statewide Jurisdiction—grants the child support agency and any administrative or judicial tribunal with authority to hear child support and paternity cases, to exert Statewide jurisdiction over the parties, and to grant orders that have Statewide effect; also permits transfer of cases between administrative areas without additional filing or service of process.

Senate amendment

Similar provision with a minor difference in wording.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment except the House recedes to the Senate language by replacing the term "administrative areas" with the term "local jurisdictions" in the section of Statewide jurisdiction.

C. Automation of State Agency Functions

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The automated systems being developed by States are to be used, to the maximum extent possible, to implement the expedited procedures.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

SUBTITLE D—PATERNITY ESTABLISHMENT

18. STATE LAW CONCERNING PATERNITY ESTABLISHMENT (SECTION 331)

A. Establishment Process Available From Birth Until Age 18

Present law

Federal law requires States to strengthen their paternity establishment laws by requiring that paternity may be established until the child reaches at 18. As of August 16, 1984, these procedures would apply to a child for whom paternity has not been established or for whom a paternity action was brought but dismissed because of statute of limitations of less than 18 years was then in effect in the State.

House bill

Same as current law.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires that paternity may be established until age 21 rather than 18.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes so that States are required to have laws that permit paternity establishment until at least age 18 (or a higher limit at State option).

B. Procedures Concerning Genetic Testing

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement laws under which the child and all other parties must undergo genetic testing upon the request of a party in contested cases.

House bill

The child and all other parties must undergo genetic testing upon the request of a party, where the request is supported by a sworn statement establishing a reasonable possibility of parentage or nonparentage. When the tests are ordered by the State agency, States must pay for the costs, subject to recoupment at State option from the farther if paternity is established.

Senate amendment

Similar provision. House mandates genetic tests in certain cases while Senate allows States with laws against genetic testing in some cases to follow State law.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both House and Senate provisions but the House recedes on the provision allowing States to exempt certain cases from the requirement for mandatory genetic testing. No State exemption, however, can permit a putative father to avoid paternity establishment procedures.

C. Voluntary Paternity Acknowledgment

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures for a simple civil process for voluntary paternity acknowledgment, including hospital-based programs.

House bill

(1) Simple Civil Process. States must have procedures that create a simple civil process for voluntary acknowledging paternity under which benefits, rights and responsibilities of acknowledgment are explained to unwed parents;

(2) Hospital Program. States must have procedures that establish a paternity acknowledgment program through hospitals and birth record agencies (and other agencies as designated by the Secretary).

(3) Paternity Services. States must have procedures that require the agency responsible for maintaining birth records to offer voluntary paternity establishment services. The Secretary must issue regulations, including regulations on other State agencies that may offer voluntary paternity acknowledgment services and the conditions such agencies must meet.

(4) Affidavit. States must have procedures that require agencies to use a uniform affidavit developed by the Secretary that is entitled to full faith and credit in any other State.

Senate amendment

(1) Simple Civil Process. Similar to House provision; Senate does not include language requiring that the explanation of alternatives, legal consequences, and rights and responsibilities be "in a language that each can understand".

(2) Hospital Program. Similar to House provision, except States must also establish good cause exceptions for not trying to establish paternity.

(3) Paternity Services. Identical to House provision.

(4) Affidavit. Similar provision but Senate amendment allows States to develop their own voluntary paternity acknowledgment form as long as they follow all the basic elements of a form developed by the Secretary.

Conference agreement

(1) Simple Civil Process. The conference agreement follows the House and Senate provisions except the House agrees to drop its requirement that the explanation be "in a language that each [parent] can understand".

(2) Hospital Program. Conferees agree to follow the House and Senate provisions but with a modification of the Senate language on "good cause" exceptions so that such exceptions become a State option.

(3) Paternity Services. The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

(4) Affidavit. The House recedes to allow States to develop their own voluntary acknowledgment form as long as the form contains all the basic elements of a form developed by the Secretary.

D. Status of Signed Paternity Acknowledgment

Present law

Federal laws requires States to implement procedures under which the voluntary acknowledgment of paternity creates a rebuttal presumption, or at State option, a conclusive presumption of paternity.

House bill

(1) Legal Finding. States must have procedures under which a signed acknowledgment of paternity is considered a legal finding of paternity unless rescinded within 60 days.

(2) Contest. States must have procedures under which a paternity acknowledgment can be challenged in court only on the basis of fraud, duress, or material mistake of fact.

(3) Rescission. States must have procedures under which minors who sign a voluntary paternity acknowledgment are allowed to rescind it until age 18 or the date of the first proceeding to establish a support order, visitation, or custody rights.

Senate amendment

(1) Legal Finding. Adds the requirement that the name of the father appear in the birth records only if there is a paternity acknowledgment signed by both parents or paternity has been established by court order;

(2) Contest. Identical to House provision.

(3) Rescission. No provision.

Conference agreement

(1) Legal Finding. The House recedes to the Senate requirement that the father's name appear in the birth records only if certain conditions are met;

(2) Contest. The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

(3) Rescission. The House agrees to drop the rescission requirement, thereby leaving this decision up to States.

E. Bar on Acknowledgment Ratification Proceedings

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures under which voluntary acknowledgment is admissible as evidence of paternity and the voluntary acknowledgment of paternity must be recognized as a basis for seeking a support order without requiring any further proceedings to establish paternity.

House bill

No judicial or administrative proceedings are required or permitted to ratify a paternity acknowledgment which is not challenged by the parents.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

F. Admissibility of Genetic Testing Results

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures which provide that any objection to genetic testing results must be made in writing within a specified number of days before any hearing at which such results may be introduced into evidence. If no objection is made, the test results must be admissible as evidence of paternity without the need for foundation testimony or other proof of authenticity or accuracy.

House bill

States must have procedures for admitting into evidence accredited genetic tests, unless any objection is made within a specified number of days, and if no objection is made, clarifying that test results are admissible without the need for foundation or other testimony.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

G. Presumption of Paternity in Certain Cases

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures which create a rebuttable or, at State option, conclusive presumption of paternity based on genetic testing results indicating a threshold probability that the alleged father is the father of the child.

House bill

States must have laws that create a rebuttable or, at State option, conclusive presumption of paternity when results from genetic testing indicate a threshold probability that the alleged father is the father of the child.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

H. Default Orders

Present law

Federal law requires States to implement procedures that require a default order to be entered in a paternity case upon a showing of service of process on the defendant and any additional showing required by State law.

House bill

A default order must be entered in a paternity case upon a showing of service of process on the defendant and any additional showing required by the State law.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

I. No Right to Jury Trial

Present law

No provision.

House bill

State laws must state that parties in a contested paternity action are not entitled to a jury trial.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

J. Temporary Support Based on Probable Paternity

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Upon motion of a party, State law must require issuance of a temporary support order pending an administrative or judicial determination of percentage if paternity is indicated by genetic testing or other clear and convincing evidence.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

K. Proof of Certain Support and Paternity Establishment Costs

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Bills for pregnancy, childbirth, and genetic testing must be admissible in judicial proceedings without foundation testimony.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

L. Standing of Putative Fathers

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Putative fathers must have a reasonable opportunity to initiate paternity action.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

M. Filing of Acknowledgments and Adjudications in State Registry

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Both voluntary acknowledgments and adjudications of paternity must be filed with the State registry of birth records for data matches with the central Case Registry of Child Support Orders established by the State.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

N. National Paternity Acknowledgment Affidavit

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary is required to develop an affidavit to be used for voluntary acknowledgment of paternity which includes the Social Security number of each parent.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House and Senate provisions but includes a clarification that the Secretary, after consulting with the State child support directors, should list the common elements that States must include on their forms.

19. OUTREACH FOR VOLUNTARY PATERNITY ESTABLISHMENT (SECTION 332)

Present law

States are required to regularly and frequently publicize, through public service announcements, the availability of child support enforcement services.

House bill

States must publicize the availability and encourage the use of procedures for voluntary establishment of paternity and child support.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

20. COOPERATION BY APPLICANTS FOR AND RECIPIENTS OF TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE FOR NEEDY FAMILIES (SECTION 333)

Present law

AFDC applicants and recipients are required to cooperate with the State in establishing the paternity of a child and in obtaining child support payments unless the applicant or recipient is found to have good cause for refusing to cooperate. Under the "good cause" regulations, the child support agency may determine that it is against the best interests of the child to seek to establish paternity in cases involving incest, rape, or pending procedures for adoption. Moreover, the agency may determine that it is against the best interest of the child to require the mother to cooperate if it is anticipated that such cooperation will result in the physical or emotional harm of the child, parent, or caretaker relative.

House bill

Individuals who apply for or receive public assistance under the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program must cooperate with child support enforcement efforts (establishing paternity, establishing, modifying or enforcing a support order) by providing specific identifying information about the other parent, unless the applicant or recipient is found to have good cause for refusing to cooperate. "Good cause" is defined by States. States may also require the applicant and child to submit to genetic testing. (See also Prohibitions in Title 1, Section 101 of the House bill.)

Senate amendment

The Senate provision is similar to the House provision except the Senate amendment places additional specific requirements on State procedures. These include requiring the custodial parent to appear at interviews, hearings, and legal proceedings; requiring the State child support agency to notify the custodial parent and the IV–A and Medicaid agencies of whether she is cooperating and if not what she must do to cooperate; and requiring that when determining the custodial parent's cooperation States take into account the best interests of the child. The Senate amendment also requires the individual and the child to submit to genetic tests pursuant to a judicial or administrative order. Responsibility for determining failure to cooperate is shifted from the agency that administers the Temporary Assistance program to the agency that administers the child support program.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate's additional requirements for cooperation by adults for or receiving IV–A benefits. In addition, conferees agree to let States decide which agency should make the determination of whether the parent is cooperating.

SUBTITLE E—PROGRAM ADMINISTRATION AND FUNDING

21. FEDERAL MATCHING PAYMENTS

Present law

The Federal Government currently reimburses each State at the rate of 66 percent for the cost of administering its child support enforcement program. The Federal Government also reimburses States 90 percent of the laboratory costs of establishing paternity, and through FY 1995, 90 percent of the costs of developing comprehensive Statewide automated systems. (There is no maintenance of effort provision in current law.)

House bill

The Federal matching payment for child support activities is maintained at 66 percent. The bill also adds a maintenance of effort requirement that the non-Federal share of IV–D funding for FY 1997 and succeeding years not be less than such funding for FY 1996.

Senate amendment

No provision. Maintains present law with respect to the Federal match rate of 66 percent.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

22. PERFORMANCE-BASED INCENTIVES AND PENALTIES (SECTION 341)

A. Incentive Adjustments to Federal Matching Rate

Present law

The Federal government reimburses approved administrative expenditures of States at a rate of 66 percent. In addition, the Federal government pays States an incentive amount ranging from 6 percent to 10 percent of both AFDC and non-AFDC collections.

House bill

Beginning in 1999, a new incentive system will reward good State performance by increasing the State's basic matching rate by up to 12 percentage points for outstanding performance in establishing paternity and by up to an additional 12 percentage points for overall performance (as measured by the percentage of cases that have support orders, the percentage of cases in which support is being paid, the ratio of child support collected to child support due, and cost-effectiveness). The Secretary will design the specific features of the system. In doing so, she will maintain overall Federal reimbursement of State programs through the combined matching rate and incentives at the level projected for the current combined matching and incentive payments to States. The effect of this provision is to change Federal financing so that relatively more Federal dollars will be awarded to States for good performance. The State must spend the money from incentive payments on their child support enforcement program.

Senate amendment

As under current law, the Senate amendment provides for an incentive payment to States, the funds for which come from the reimbursement of cash welfare payments to the Federal Government that is the Federal share of child support collections paid on behalf of families. Not later than 60 days after enactment, the DHHS Secretary is required to establish a committee, which must include State child support directors, which must develop for the Secretary's approval a formula for the distribution of incentive payments to the States. The State's incentive payment is based on its comparative performance as measured by five criteria and seven factors that are stipulated in the amendment.

Conference agreement

The conferees agree to retain the present financing system of 66 percent Federal matching payments and an incentive system that enables States to increase their Federal payments by up to 10 percent of AFDC and non-AFDC collections. However, the conferees also require the Secretary, in consultation with State child support directors, to develop a new incentive system that provides additional payments to States (i.e., above the base matching rate of 66 percent) based on their performance and to report details of the new system to the Committees on Ways and Means and Finance by June 1, 1996. The Secretary's new system must be revenue neutral. The two committees intend to study the Secretary's recommendations, as well as recommendations by other individuals and organizations, and to design and perhaps enact a new incentive system that is revenue neutral in the near future.

B. Conforming Amendments

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Two conforming amendments are made in Section 454 of the Social Security Act.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes to the two conforming amendments in the House bill.

C. Calculation of IV–D Paternity Establishment Percentage

Present law

States are required to meet Federal standards for the establishment of paternity. The standard relates to the percentage obtained by dividing the number of children in the State who are born out of wedlock, are receiving AFDC or child support enforcement services, and for whom paternity has been established by the number of children who are born out of wedlock and are receiving AFDC or child support enforcement services. To meet Federal requirements, this percentage in a State must be at least 75 percent or meet the following standards of improvement from the preceding year: (1) if the State paternity establishment ratio is between 50 and 75 percent, the State ratio must increase by 3 or more percentage points from the ratio of the preceding year; (2) if the State ratio is between 45 and 50, the ratio must increase at least 4 percentage points; (3) if the State ratio is between 40 and 45 percent, it must increase at least 5 percentage points; and (4) if the State ratio is below 40 percent, it must increase at least 6 percentage points. If an audit finds that the State's child support enforcement program has not substantially complied with the requirements of its State plan, the State is subject to a penalty. In accord with this penalty, the Secretary must reduce a State's AFDC benefit payment by not less than 1 percent nor more than 2 percent for the first failure to comply; by not less than 2 percent nor more than 3 percent for the second consecutive failure to comply; and by not less than 3 percent nor more than 5 percent for third or subsequent consecutive failure to comply.

House bill

The IV–D paternity establishment percentage for a fiscal year is equal to: (1) the total number of children in the State who were born out-of-wedlock, who have not reached age 1 and for whom paternity is acknowledged or established during the fiscal year, divided by (2) the total number of children born out-of-wedlock in the State during the fiscal year. The requirements for meeting the standard are the same as current law except the 75 percent rule is increased to 90 percent. The noncompliance provisions of the child support program are modified so that the Secretary must take overall program performance into account and the minimum paternity establishment percentage is raised from 75 to 90.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment. States have the option of calculating the paternity establishment rate by either counting only unwed births in the State IV–D caseload or by counting all unwed births in the State.

D. Effective Dates

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The new incentive payments go into effect on October 1, 1997, but procedures for computing the State incentive payments are not actually based on the new system until fiscal year 1999; the changes in penalty procedure become effective upon enactment.

Senate amendment

Effective upon enactment, except present law applies for purposes of incentive payments for fiscal years before FY 2000.

Conference agreement

Effective upon enactment.

23. FEDERAL AND STATE REVIEWS AND AUDITS (SECTION 342)

A. State Agency Activities

Present law

States are required to maintain a full record of child support collections and disbursements and to maintain an adequate reporting system.

House bill

States are required to annually review and report to the Secretary, using data from their automatic data processing system, both information adequate to determine the State's compliance with Federal requirements for expedited procedures and timely case processing as well as the information necessary to calculate their levels of accomplishment and rates of improvement on the performance indicators in the bill.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except the Senate does not include the requirement that States submit information on State compliance with Federal mandates on timely case processing.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both the House and Senate provisions but the House recedes by dropping its requirement that States submit information on timely case processing.

B. Federal Activities

Present law

The Secretary must collect and maintain, on a fiscal year basis, up-to-date State-by-State statistics on each of the services provided under the child support enforcement program. The Secretary is also required to evaluate the implementation of State child support enforcement programs and conduct audits of these programs as necessary, but not less often than once every three years (or annually if a State has been found to be out of compliance with program rules).

House bill

The Secretary is required to determine the amount (if any) of incentives or penalties. The Secretary must also review State reports on compliance with Federal requirements and provide States with recommendations for corrective action. Audits must be conducted at least once every 3 years, or more often in the case of States that fail to meet Federal requirements. The purpose of the audits is to assess the completeness, reliability, accuracy, and security of data reported for use in calculating the performance indicators and to assess the adequacy of financial management of the State program.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

C. Effective Date

Present law

No provision.

House bill

These provisions take effect beginning with the calendar quarter that begins 12 months after enactment.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

24. REQUIRED REPORTING PROCEDURES (SECTION 343)

Present law

The Secretary is required to assist States in establishing adequate reporting procedures and must maintain records of child support enforcement operations and of amounts collected and disbursed, including costs incurred in collecting support payments.

House bill

The Secretary is required to establish procedures and uniform definitions for State collection and reporting of information necessary to measure State compliance with expedited processes and timely case processing.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except does not mention timely case processing.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follow both the House and Senate provisions except, as in the State Agency Activities provision (see #23A above), the House recedes by dropping State reports on timely case processing.

25. AUTOMATED DATA PROCESSING REQUIREMENTS (SECTION 344)

A. In General

Present Law

Federal law (P.L. 104–35) requires that by October 1, 1997, States have an operational automated data processing and information retrieval system designed to control, account for, and monitor all factors in the support enforcement and paternity determination process, the collection and distribution of support payments, and the costs of all services rendered.

House bill

States are required to have a single Statewide automated data processing and information retrieval system which has the capacity to perform the necessary functions, as described in this section.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

B. Program Management

Present law

Federal law requires the that automated data processing system be capable of providing management information on all IV–D cases from intital referral or application through collection and enforcement.

House bill

The State data system must be used to perform functions the Secretary specifies, including controlling and accounting for the use of Federal, State, and local funds and maintaining the data necessary to meet Federal reporting requirements in carrying out the program.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

C. Calculation of Performance Indicators

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The automated system must maintain the requisite data for Federal reporting, calculate the State's performance for purposes of the incentive and penalty provisions, and have in place systems controls to ensure the completeness, reliability, and accuracy of the data.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

D. Information Integrity and Security

Present law

Federal law requires that the automated data processing system be capable of providing security against unauthorized access to, or use of, the data in such system.

House bill

The State agency must have safeguards to protect the integrity, accuracy, and completeness of, and access to, data in the automated systems (including restricting access to passwords, monitoring of access to and use of the system, training, and imposing penalties).

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

E. Regulations

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary shall prescribe final regulations for implementation of this section no later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment.

F. Implementation Timetable

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The statutory provisions for State implementation of Federal automatic data processing requirements are revised to provide that, first, all requirements enacted on or before the date of enactment of the Family Support Act of 1988 are to be met by October 1, 1995. The requirements enacted on or before the date of enactment of this bill must be met by October 1, 1999. The October 1, 1999 deadline will be extended by one day for each day by which the Secretary fails to meet the 2-year deadline for regulations.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except allows States to meet requirements of the Family Support Act by October 1, 1997 rather than 1995.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both House and Senate provisions but the completion date for data requirements imposed on States by the Family Support Act follows the Senate provision of October 1, 1997.

G. Special Federal Matching Rate for Development Costs of Automated Systems

Present law

The Federal Government, through FY 1995, reimburses States at a 90 percent matching rate for the costs of developing comprehensive Statewide automated systems.

House bill

The Federal government will provide 90 percent matching funds for fiscal year 1996 that will be applied to all State activities related to developing a comprehensive Statewide automated system. For fiscal years 1997 through 2001, the matching rate for the provisions of this bill and other authorized provisions will be the higher of 80 percent or the matching rate generally applicable to the State IV–D program, including incentive payments (which could be as high as 90 percent).

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision except continues the 90 percent matching rate for 1996 and 1997 in the case of provisions outlined in advanced planning documents submitted before May 1, 1995.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment but the House recedes on the provision to continue 90 percent reimbursement of data processing activities that were included in any advanced planning document approved by the Secretary before May 1, 1995. The 90 percent funding, which continues through October 1, 1997, includes approved expenditures by States that were made between October 1, 1995 and the date of passage of this legislation.

H. Temporary Limitation on Payments Under Special Federal Matching Rate

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Secretary must create procedures to cap these payments at $260,000,000 over 5 years (FY 1996–2000) to be distributed among States by a formula set in regulations which takes into account the relative size of State caseloads and the level of automation needed to meet applicable automatic data processing requirements.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment, except the limitation on payments is increased from $260,000,000 to $400,000,000. This increase was made necessary by general agreement by analysts at HHS and the Congressional Budget Office that the numerous data processing requirements imposed by this Act would cost the States $400 million to implement.

26. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE (SECTION 345)

Present law

Annual appropriations are made to cover the expenses of the Administration for Children and Families, which includes the Federal Office of Child Support Enforcement (OCSE). Among OCSE's administrative expenses are the costs of providing technical assistance to the States.

House bill

The Secretary can use 1 percent of the Federal share of child support collections on behalf of families in the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program the preceding year to provide technical assistance to the States. Technical assistance can include training of State and Federal staff, research and demonstration programs, and special projects of regional or national significance. The Secretary must use up to 2 percent of the Federal share of collections for operation of the Federal Parent Locator Service to the extent that costs of the Parent Locator Service are not recovered by user fees.

Senate amendment

Identical provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

27. REPORTS AND DATA COLLECTION BY THE SECRETARY (SECTION 346)

Present law

The Secretary is required to submit to Congress, not later than 3 months after the end of the fiscal year, a complete report on all child support enforcement activities.

House bill

In addition to current reporting requirements, the Secretary is required to report the following data to Congress in her annual report each fiscal year:

(1) the total amount of child support payments collected;

(2) the cost to the State and Federal governments of furnishing child support services;

(3) the number of cases involving families that became ineligible for aid under part A with respect to whom a child support payment was received;

(4) the total amount of current support collected and distributed;

(5) the total amount of past due support collected and distributed as arrearages; and

(6) the total amount of support due and unpaid for all fiscal years.

These requirements apply to fiscal year 1996 and succeeding fiscal years.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires the Secretary to include information on the degree to which States met Federal statutory time limits in responding to interstate requests and in distributing child support collections.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree to follow the provisions in both bills except that the House recedes on the additional requirements the Senate included in the Secretary's report to Congress.

SUBTITLE F—ESTABLISHMENT AND MODIFICATION OF SUPPORT ORDERS

28. NATIONAL CHILD SUPPORT GUIDELINES COMMISSION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Establishes a National Child Support Guidelines Commission that is responsible for deciding whether it is appropriate to develop national child support guidelines for consideration by the Congress or for adoption by individual States and the benefits and deficiencies of such models. Several matters the Commission must consider, such as the feasibility of adapting uniform terms in all child support orders, are outlined. The Commission is to be comprised of 12 individuals, 2 each appointed by the Chairman of Finance and Ways and Means, 1 each by the ranking member of Finance and Ways and Means, and 6 by the Secretary. The Commission report must be issued within 2 years.

Conference agreement

The Senate recedes to the House provision of no National Guidelines Commission.

29. SIMPLIFIED PROCESS FOR REVIEW AND ADJUSTMENT OF CHILD SUPPORT ORDERS (SECTION 351)

Present law

A child support order legally obligates noncustodial parents to provide financial support for their child and stipulates the amount of the obligation and how it is to be paid. In 1984, P.L. 98–378 required States to establish guidelines for establishing child support orders. In 1988, P.L. 100–485 made the guidelines binding on judges and other officials who had authority to establish support orders. P.L. 100–485 also required States to review and adjust individual child support orders once every 3 years under some circumstances. States are required to notify both resident and nonresident parents of their right to a review.

House bill

States must review and, as appropriate, adjust the support order every 3 years. States may adjust child support orders by either applying the State guidelines and updating the reward amount or by applying a cost of living increase to the order. Both parties must be given 30 days after notice of adjustment to contest the results. States may use automated methods to identify orders eligible for review, conduct the review, identify orders eligible for adjustment, and apply the appropriate adjustment to the orders based on the threshold established by the State. States must also review and, upon a showing of a change in circumstances, adjust orders pursuant to the child support guidelines upon request of a party. States are required to give parties one notice of their right to request review and adjustment, which may be included in the order establishing the support amount.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision except adds that review and adjustment must be done "upon the request of either parent or the State." If neither parent requests a review, States have the option of avoiding the 3-year requirement.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree to follow the House and Senate provisions with one exception. The House recedes to the Senate provision that States are not required to conduct reviews unless requested by either parent but with the additional requirement that States inform mothers at least once every 3 years in writing of their right to a review.

30. FURNISHING CONSUMER REPORTS FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES RELATING TO CHILD SUPPORT (SECTION 352)

Present law

P.L. 102–537 amends the Fair Credit Act to require consumer reporting agencies to include in any consumer report information on child support delinquencies provided by or verified by a child support enforcement agency, which antedates the report by 7 years.

House bill

This section amends the Fair Credit Reporting Act. In response to a request by the head of a State or local child support agency (or a State or local government official authorized by the head of such an agency), consumer credit agencies must release information if the person making the request: certifies that the consumer report is needed to establish an individual's capacity to make child support payments or determine the level of payments; gives the consumer credit agency 10 days notice that the report is being requested; and provides assurances that the consumer report will be kept confidential, will be used solely for child support purposes, and will not be used in connection with any other civil, administrative, or criminal proceeding or for any other purpose. Consumer reporting agencies must also give reports to a child support agency for use to set an initial or modified award.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except requires that the consumer must have been shown to be the father (i.e., paternity must be established).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows both the House and Senate provisions except that the House recedes to the Senate requirement that the consumer must have been shown to be the father.

31. NONLIABILITY FOR DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS PROVIDING FINANCIAL RECORDS (SECTION 353)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Depository institutions are not liable for information provided to child support agencies. Child support agencies can disclose information obtained from depository institutions only for child support purposes. Individuals who knowingly disclose information from financial records can have civil actions brought against them in Federal district court; the maximum penalty is $1,000 for each disclosure or actual damages plus, in the case of "willful disclosure" resulting from "gross negligence" punitive damages, plus the costs of the action.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate requirement that States have laws protecting depository institutions when information is provided to child support agencies.

SUBTITLE G–ENFORCEMENT OF SUPPORT ORDERS

32. FEDERAL INCOME TAX REFUND OFFSET

A. Changed Order of Refund Distribution Under Internal Revenue Code

Present law

Since 1981 in AFDC cases, and 1984 in non-AFDC cases, Federal law has required States to implement procedures under which child support agencies can collect child support arrearages through the inception of Federal income tax refunds.

Child support arrearages obtained through Federal income tax refunds are distributed to the State and are retained by the State for arrearages owed to it under the AFDC assignment. States must reimburse the Federal government for their share of these arrearage payments. If no arrearages are owed the State, the money is used to pay arrearages to the family.

House bill

The Internal Revenue Code is amended so that offsets of child support arrears owed to individuals take priority over most debts owed Federal agencies. Proceeds from tax intercepts will be distributed as follows:

(1) for Federal education debts and debts to the Department of Health and Human Services;

(2) for child support owed to individuals;

(3) for child support arrearages owed to State governments; and

(4) for other Federal debts.

The provision also amends the Internal Revenue Code so that the order of priority for distribution of tax offsets follows the distribution rules for child support payments specified in subtitle A of this bill.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate so that the order of payments from the intercepts remains unchanged.

B. Elimination of Disparities in Treatment of Assigned and Non-Assigned Arrearages

Present law

Federal rules set different criteria for AFDC and non-AFDC cases. For example, in AFDC cases arrearages may be collected through the income tax offset program regardless of the child's age. In non-AFDC cases, the tax offset program can be used only if the postminor child is disabled (pursuant to the meaning of disability under titles II or XVI of the SSA). Moreover, the arrearage in AFDC cases must be only $150 or more, whereas the arrearage in non-AFDC cases must be at least $500.

House bill

The bill eliminates disparate treatment of families not receiving public assistance by repealing provisions applicable only to support arrears not assigned to the State. The Secretary of the Treasury is given access to information in the National Directory of new Hires for tax purposes.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate bill (no provision).

33. INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE COLLECTION OF ARREARAGES (SECTION 361)

Present law

If the amount of overdue child support is at least $750, the Internal Revenue Service can enforce the child support obligation through its regular collection process, which may include seizure of property, freezing accounts, or use of other procedures if the child support enforcement agencies requests assistance according to prescribed rules (e.g., certifying that the delinquency is at least $750, etc.)

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Amends the Internal Revenue Code so that no additional fees can be assessed for adjustment to previously certified amounts for the same obligor, effective October 1, 1997.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate requirement that IRS cannot charge additional fees in the case of a previously certified amount for the same obligor.

34. AUTHORITY TO COLLECT SUPPORT FROM FEDERAL EMPLOYEES (SECTION 362)

A. Consolidation and Streamlining of Authorities

Present law

Federal law allows the wages of Federal employees to be garnished to enforce legal obligations for child support or alimony. Federal law provides that moneys payable by the United States to any individual are subject to being garnished in order to meet an individual's legal obligation to provide child support or make alimony payments. An executive order issued 2/27/95 establishes the Federal government as a model employer in promoting and facilitating the establishment and enforcement of child support.

By Executive Order on 2/27/95, all Federal agencies, including the Uniformed Services, are required to cooperate fully in efforts to establish paternity and child support and to enforce the collection of child and medical support. All Federal agencies are to review their wage withhholding procedures to ensure that they are in full compliance.

Beginning no later than July 1, 1995, the Director of the Office of Personal Management must publish annually in the Federal Register the list of agents (and their addresses) designated to receive service of withholding notices for Federal employees.

Federal law states that neither the United States nor any disbursing officer or government entity shall be liable with respect to any payment made from moneys due or payable from the United States pursuant to the legal process.

Federal law provides that money that may be garnished includes compensation for personal services, whether such compensation is denominated as wages, salary, commission, bonus, pay, or otherwise, and includes but is not limited to, severance pay, sick pay, incentive payments, and periodic payments.

Includes definitions of "United States", "child support", "alimony", "private person", and "legal process".

House bill

Federal Employees are subject to wage withholding and other actions taken against them by State Child Support Enforcement Agencies.

Federal agencies are responsible for wage withholding and other child support actions taken by the State as if they were a private employer.

The head of each Federal agency must designate an agent and place the agent's name, title, address, and telephone number in the Federal Register annually. The agent must, upon receipt of process, send written notice to the individual involved as soon as possible, but no later than 15 days, and to comply with any notice of wage withholding or respond to other process within 30 days.

Amends existing law governing allocation of moneys owed by a Federal employee to give priority to child support, to require allocation of available funds, up to the amount owed, among child support claimants, and to allocate remaining funds to other claimants on a first-come, first-served basis.

A government entity served with notice of process for enforcement of child support is not required to change its normal pay and disbursement cycle to comply with the legal process.

Similar to current law, the U.S., the government of the District of Columbia, and disbursing officers are not liable for child support payments made in accord with this section; nor is any Federal employee subject to disciplinary action or civil or criminal liability for disclosing information while carrying out the provisions of this section.

The President has the authority to promulgate regulations to implement this section as it applies to Federal employees of the Administrative branch of government; the President Pro Tempore of the Senate and Speaker of the House can issue regulations governing their employees; and the Chief Justice can issue regulations applicable to the Judicial branch.

This section broadens the definition of income to include funds such as insurance benefits, retirement and pension pay, survivor's benefits, compensation for death and black lung disease, veteran's benefits, and workers' compensation; but to exclude from income funds paid to defray expenses incurred in carrying out job duties, owed to the U.S., used to pay Federal employment taxes and fines and forfeitures ordered by court martial, withheld for tax purposes, used for health insurance or life insurance premiums, normal retirement contributions, or life insurance premiums.

This section includes definitions of "United States", "child support", "alimony", "private person", and "legal process".

The Secretary of Defense must also ensure that payments to satisfy current support or child support arrears are made from disposable retirement pay. (In their report the conferees noted that the demonstrations would not grant any new powers to the States to require participation by noncustodial parents. The demonstrations were to be evaluated.)

House bill

States must have laws that direct courts to order individuals owing past-due child support for a child receiving assistance under the Temporary Family Assistance program either to pay the support due or to participate in work activities. "Past-due support" is defined.

Senate amendment

Similar to House provision, except refers to "support" rather than "past-due support."

Conference agreement

Conferees agree to follow the House and Senate provisions except that the Senate recedes to the House provision that work apply only to nonresident parents owing past-due support.

39. DEFINITION OF SUPPORT ORDER (SECTION 366)

Present law

However, if the amount overdue is less than $1,000, information regarding it shall be made available only at the option of the State. Moreover, any information may only be made available after the noncustodial parent has been notified of the proposed action and has been given reasonable opportunity to contest the accuracy of the information. States are permitted to charge consumer reporting agencies that request child support arrearage information for a fee, not to exceed the actual cost.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

States are required to have procedures to periodically report to consumer credit reporting agencies the name of any noncustodial parent who is delinquent in the payment of support and the amount of overdue support owed by the parent.

House bill

States are required to have procedures to accord full faith and credit and to enforce in accordance with State law a lien from another State. The lien must be accompanied by a certification from the State issuing the lien of the amount of overdue support and a certification that due process requirements have been met. State child support agencies must have procedures for certifying arrearages in excess of $5,000 and for notifying individuals who are in arrears.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate provision of revoking passports for individuals owing more than $5,000 in delinquent child support.

44. INTERNATIONAL CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT (SECTION 371)

Present law

The United States has not signed any of the major treaties regarding international support enforcement. Pursuant to the Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Act (URESA), most States have reciprocal agreements with at least one foreign country regarding reciprocal enforcement of support orders. State do not have the power to enter into treaties.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Secretary of State is authorized to negotiate reciprocal agreements with foreign nations on behalf of the States, territories, and possessions of the United States regarding the international enforcement of child support obligations.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with substantial modification. The Secretary of State, with concurrence of the Secretary of HHS, is authorized to declare reciprocity with foreign countries having requisite procedures for establishing and enforcing support orders. The Secretary may revoke reciprocity if she determines that the enforcement procedures do not continue to meet the requisite criteria.

The requirements for reciprocity include procedures in the foreign country for U.S. residents—available at no cost—to establish parentage, to establish and enforce support orders for children and custodial parents, and to distribute payments.

The Secretary of HHS is required to facilitate enforcement services in international cases involving residents of the U.S. and of foreign reciprocating countries, including developing uniform forms and procedures, and providing information from the FPLS on the State of residence of the obligor.

Where there is no Federal reciprocity agreement, States are permitted to enter into reciprocal agreements with foreign countries.

The State plan must provide that request for services in international cases be treated the same as interstate cases, except that no application will be required and no costs will be assessed against the foreign country or the obligee (costs may be assessed at State option against the obligor).

This jurisdiction may be exclusive or concurrent with State court jurisdiction, depending on specified circumstances.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Such agreements shall provide for the cooperative delivery of child support enforcement services in Indian country and for the forwarding of all funds collected by the tribe or organization to the State agency, or conversely, by the State agency to the tribe or organization, which shall distribute the funds according to the agreement. The DHHS Secretary in appropriate cases is authorized to send Federal funds directly to the tribe or organization.

Includes definition of the term "financial institution."

Conference agreement

Conferees agree that the House recede to the Senate requirement that States perform data matches on information supplied by financial institutions in the case of parents who owe past-due child support and have liens against them.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate requirement that paternal grandparents be held accountable for paying child support in the case of minor mothers with children being supported by benefits from the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families block grant, or that the maternal grandparents be held accountable for paying child support in the case of a minor father raising children who receive benefits from the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families block grant.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

All orders enforced under this part must include a provision for health care coverage. If the noncustodial parent changes jobs and the new employer provides health coverage, the State must send notice of coverage, which shall operate to enroll the child in the health plan, to the new employer.

Conference agreement

The House recedes to the Senate provision on medical care coverage provided to children by nonresident parents changing jobs.

SUBTITLE I—ENHANCING RESPONSIBILITY AND OPPORTUNITY FOR NON-RESIDENTIAL PARENTS

51. GRANTS TO STATES FOR ACCESS AND VISITATION PROGRAMS (SECTION 381)

A. In General

Present law

In 1988, Congress authorized the Secretary to fund for FY 1990 and FY 1991 demonstration projects by States to help divorcing or never-married parents cooperate with each other, especially in arranging for visits between the child and the nonresident parent.

House bill

The bill authorizes grants to States for access and visitation programs including mediation, counseling, education, development of parenting plans, and visitation enforcement. Visitation enforcement can include monitoring, supervision, neutral drop-off and pickup, and development of guidelines for visitation and alternative custody agreements. States are required to monitor and evaluate their programs and are given the authority to subcontract the program to courts, local public agencies, or private non-profit agencies. Programs operating under the grant do not have to be Statewide. Funding is authorized as capped spending under section IV–D of the Social Security Act. Projects are required to supplement rather than supplant State funds.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

In any given State, the bill becomes effective either on October 1, 1996 or on the first day of the first calendar quarter after the close of the first regular session of the State Legislature that begins after the date of enactment of the bill. In the case of States that require a constitutional amendment to comply with the requirements of the bill, the grace period is extended either 1 year after the effective date of the necessary State constitutional amendment or 5 years after the date of enactment of the bill.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (i.e., no provision).

Temporary eligibility for cash benefits for poor disabled children residing in States applying alternative income eligibility standards under Medicaid

Present law

States generally are required to provide Medicaid coverage for recipients of SSI. However, States may use more restrictive eligibility standards for Medicaid than those for SSI if they were using those standards on January 1, 1972 (before implementation of SSI). States that have chosen to apply at least one more restrictive standard are known as "section 209(b)" States, after the section of the Social Security Amendments of 1972 (P.L. 92-603) that established the option. These States may vary in their definition of disability, or in their standards related to income or resources. There are 12 section 209(b) States: Connecticut, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, and Virginia.

House bill

The House bill provides for temporary eligibility for cash SSI benefits (through the end of FY 1996) for children who live in States that apply alternative income eligibility standards under Medicaid (also known as "209(b)" States).

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

Present law

Federal law stipulates that when an individual enters a hospital or other medical institution in which more than half of the bill is paid by the Medicaid program, his or her monthly SSI benefit standard is reduced to $30 per month. This personal needs allowance is intended to pay for small personal expenses, with the cost of maintenance and medical care provided by the Medicaid program.

House bill

Cash SSI payments to institutionalized children would be reduced for those whose medical costs are covered by private insurance.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

The Commissioner of Social Security and the Secretary of HHS will prescribe necessary regulations within three months after enactment of this Act.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Examination of mental listings used to determine eligibility of children for SSI benefits by reason of disability

Present law

Section 202 of the Social Security Independence and Program Improvements Act of 1994 established a Childhood Disability Commission to study the desirability and methods of increasing the extent to which benefits are used in the effort to assist disabled children in achieving independence and engaging in substantial gainful activity. The Commission was also charged with examining the effects of the SSI program on disabled children and their families.

House bill

The Childhood Disability Commission must review the mental listings used by the Social Security administration to determine child SSI eligibility. The Commission should conduct this investigation to ensure that the criteria in these listings are appropriate and that SSI eligibility is limited to children with serious disabilities for whom Federal assistance is necessary to improve the child's condition or quality of life.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment (i.e., no provision) due to the Childhood Disability Commission having completed their final report.

SUBTITLE C—STATE SUPPLEMENTATION PROGRAMS

1. REPEAL OF MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT REQUIREMENT APPLICABLE TO OPTIONAL STATE PROGRAMS FOR SUPPLEMENTATION OF SSI BENEFITS (SECTION 221)

Present law

Since the beginning of the SSI program, States have had the option to supplement (with State funds) the Federal SSI payment. The purpose of section 1618 was to encourage States to pass along to SSI recipients the amount of any Federal SSI benefit increase. Under section 1618, a State that is found to be not in compliance with the "pass along/maintenance of effort provision" is subject to loss of its Medicaid reimbursements. Section 1618 allows States to comply with the "pass along/maintenance of effort" provision by either maintaining their State supplementary payment levels at or above 1983 levels or by maintaining total annual expenditures for supplementary payments (including any Federal cost-of-living adjustment) at a level at least equal to the prior 12-month period, provided the State was in compliance for that period. In effect, section 1618 requires that once a State elects to provide supplementary payments it must continue to do so. [Sec. 1618 of the Social Security Act]

House bill

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with modification deleting the Comptroller General as a ex officio member and deleting the prohibition against officer or employee of any government being appointed to serve on the Commission. 1. ELIGIBILITY FOR SSI BENEFITS BASED ON SOCIAL SECURITY RETIREMENT AGE (SECTION 251)

Present law

The SSI program guarantees a minimum level of cash income to all aged, blind, or disabled persons with limited resources. The SSI program defines "aged" as persons age 65 and older.

House bill

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment deletes references to age 65 and instead defines as "aged" those persons who reach "retirement age" as defined by the Social Security program. The Social Security "retirement age"—the age at which retired workers receive benefits that are not reduced for "early retirement"—gradually will rise from 65 to 67. It will do so in two steps. First, the retirement age will increase by 2 months for each year that a person was born after 1937, until it reaches age 66 for those born in 1943 (i.e., those who attain age 66 in 2009). Second, it will again increase by 2 months for each year that a person was born after 1954 until it reaches age 67 for those born after 1959.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

TITLE IV. RESTRICTING WELFARE AND PUBLIC BENEFITS FOR ALIENS

1. STATEMENTS OF NATIONAL POLICY CONCERNING WELFARE AND IMMIGRATION (SECTION 400)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

The Congress makes the following statements concerning national policy with respect to welfare and immigration:

(i) Self-sufficiency has been a basic principle of U.S. immigration law since this country's earliest immigration statutes;

(ii) It continues to be the immigration policy of the U.S. that aliens within the nation's borders depend not on public resources, but rely on their own capabilities and the resources of their families and sponsors and that the availability of public benefits not constitute an incentive for immigration;

(iii) Aliens have been applying for and receiving public benefits at increasing rates;

(iv) Current eligibility rules and unenforceable financial support agreements have proved incapable of assuring that individual aliens not burden the public benefits system;

(v) It is a compelling government interest to enact new rules for eligibility and sponsorship agreements to assure that aliens become self-reliant; and

(vi) It is a compelling government interest to remove the incentive for illegal immigration provided by the availability of public benefits.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with a modification regarding a

State's option to choose to follow Federal classifications regarding eligibility.

SUBTITLE A—ELIGIBILITY FOR FEDERAL BENEFITS PROGRAMS

2. INELIGIBILITY OF ILLEGAL ALIENS FOR CERTAIN FEDERAL BENEFITS PROGRAMS (SECTION 401)

Present law

Current law limits alien eligibility for most major Federal assistance programs, including restrictions on, among other programs, Supplemental Security Income, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, housing assistance, and Food Stamps Programs. Current law is silent on alienage under, among other programs, school lunch and nutrition, Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC), Head Start, migrant health centers, and the earned income tax credit.

Under the programs with restrictions, benefits are generally allowed for permanent resident aliens (also referred to as immigrants and green card holders), refugees, asylees, and parolees, but benefits (other than emergency Medicaid) are denied to nonimmigrants (or aliens lawfully admitted as, e.g., tourists, students, or temporary workers) and illegal aliens. Benefits are permitted under AFDC, SSI, unemployment compensation, and nonemergency Medicaid to other aliens permanently residing in the U.S. under color of law (PRUCOL).

House bill

Any alien who is not lawfully present in the U.S. shall not be eligible for any Federal means-tested public benefits program, with the exception of non-cash, in-kind emergency assistance, including emergency medical services. Housing-related assistance, which allows limited assistance for households containing both eligible and ineligible individuals, remains prohibited as under current law.

The Attorney General is to decide which aliens are lawfully present for purposes of benefit eligibility. In doing so, the Attorney General is not required to consider an alien to be lawfully present solely because the alien is considered to be permanently residing under color of law (PRUCOL) under current standards.

Senate amendment

Any individual who is not lawfully present in the U.S. is ineligible for any Federal benefit other than: emergency medical services under Medicaid; short-term emergency disaster relief; assistance under the National School Lunch Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; and public health assistance for immunizations and, if found necessary by HHS, testing for and treatment of communicable diseases. Similarly, States which administer a Federally-funded benefit program (or provide benefits pursuant to such a program) are not required to assist aliens who are not lawfully present.

An individual is lawfully present for purposes of qualifying for benefits if the individual is a citizen, non-citizen national (i.e. American Samoan), permanent resident alien, refugee, asylee (including an alien who has had his/her deportation stayed because it would return the alien to a country which would persecute him/her), or an alien who has been paroled into the U.S. by the Attorney General for at least 1 year.

Noncitizens are not lawfully present for the purposes of the SSI program merely because they are considered to be permanently residing under color of law (PRUCOL).S0634

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, except that aliens who are not lawfully present in the U.S. and nonimmigrants and aliens paroled into the U.S. for a period of less than 1 year as described below are grouped together and defined as classes "not qualified" to receive most Federal public benefits. However, even these "non-qualified" aliens may continue to receive: short-term, in-kind, emergency disaster relief; emergency medical services under Medicaid; public health assistance for immunizations and testing and treatment to prevent the spread of communicable diseases; and programs specified by the Attorney General as necessary to protect life and safety, such as soup kitchens and crisis counseling. An exception is also made for benefits payable under title II of the Social Security Act for certain legal aliens. With regard to public housing assistance, non-qualified aliens receiving benefits on the date of enactment will continue to be treated as they are under current law. This section, however, does not prevent the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development or the Secretary of Agriculture from processing all aliens currently receiving housing assistance under the rules and regulations provided for under section 214 of the housing and Community Development Act of 1980.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment regarding the definition of Federal public benefits for this and subsequent sections, namely: any grant, contract, loan, professional license, or commercial license provided by an agency of the United States or by appropriated funds of the United States; and any retirement, welfare, health, disability, public or assisted housing, post-secondary education, food assistance, unemployment benefit, or any other similar benefit for which payments or assistance are provided to an individual, household, or family by an agency of the U.S. or by appropriated funds of the U.S.

The allowance for treatment of communicable diseases is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply where absolutely necessary to prevent the spread of such diseases. This is only a stop-gap measure until the deportation of a person or persons unlawfully here. It is not intended to provide authority for continued treatment of such diseases for a long term.

The allowance for emergency medical services under Medicaid is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply to medical care that is strictly of an emergency nature, such as medical treatment administered in an emergency room, critical care unit, or intensive care unit. The conferees do not intend that emergency medical services include pre-natal or delivery care assistance that is not strictly of an emergency nature as specified herein.

The intent of the conferees is that title I, part A of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act would not be affected by section 401 because the benefit is not provided to an individual, household, or family eligibility unit.

3. INELIGIBILITY OF NONIMMIGRANTS, ASYLEES, AND PAROLEES FOR CERTAIN FEDERAL BENEFITS PROGRAMS (SECTION 401)

A. In General

Present law

The Immigration and Nationality Act lists 19 categories of nonimmigrant aliens, including tourists, business visitors, foreign students, exchange visitors, temporary workers, and diplomats. Aliens granted political asylum and aliens allowed into the U.S. under the Attorney General's discretionary parole power are not among the nonimmigrant categories. Nonimmigrants generally are denied benefits under public benefits programs that have alienage restrictions. By contrast, asylees and parolees are not disqualified.

House bill

Aliens who are lawfully in the U.S. as nonimmigrants are ineligible for means-tested Federal benefits, other than the programs excepted below. Nonimmigrants admitted as temporary agricultural workers are not to be treated as nonimmigrants for public benefits purposes, but rather are to be treated as immigrants. Other aliens who also are not to be treated as nonimmigrants include aliens granted asylum and aliens paroled into the U.S. for 1 year or longer. However, aliens paroled into the U.S. for a period briefer than 1 year are subject to the nonimmigrant restrictions.

Senate amendment

Nonimmigrant aliens are not considered lawfully present for Federal benefits purposes, and are thus ineligible for any Federal benefit other than the programs specifically excepted below.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment, as described in section 2 above.

B. Excepted Programs

Present law

Of Federal programs with alien eligibility restrictions, nonimmigrants are eligible for emergency services under Medicaid. Temporary agricultural workers may receive legal services funded through the Legal Services Corporation with respect to their wages, housing, and other employment rights covered by their employment contract. Those nonimmigrants whose wages are not exempt from unemployment taxes (FUTA) may qualify for unemployment compensation under certain circumstances.

House bill

Exception of the bill's blanket denial of Federal means-tested assistance to nonimmigrants is made for Emergency Assistance, including non-cash emergency medical services. Housing-related assistance is not covered by the bill's general rule, but rather existing restrictions udner housing programs are to continue to apply. These restrictions deny assisted housing to nonimmigrants except as they may incidentally benefit as members of mixed families. However, all aliens granted parole are eligible for housing assistance.

Senate amendment

Permits nonimmigrants (and all others who are not lawfully present) to receive: emergency medical services under Medicaid; short-term emergency disaster relief; school lunch and child nutrition assistance; and public health assistance for immunizations and, if found necessary by HHS, testing for and treatment of communicable diseases.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment, as described in section 2 above.

The allowance for treatment of communicable diseases is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply where absolutely necessary to prevent the spread of such diseases. This is only a stop-gap measure until the deportation of a person or persons unlawfully here. It is not intended to provide authority for continued treatment of such diseases for a long term.

The allowance for emergency medical services under Medicaid is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply to medical care that is strictly of an emergency nature, such as medical treatment administered in an emergency room, critical care unit, or intensive care unit. The conferees do not intend that emergency medical services include pre-natal or delivery care assistance that is not strictly of an emergency nature as specified herein.

C. Treatment of Aliens Paroled Into the U.S.

Present law

In some cases, aliens paroled into the U.S. are entitled to public benefits while they remain in parole status.

House bill

Aliens paroled into the U.S. for less than 1 year are treated as nonimmigrants for benefits purposes (i.e., general ineligibility) but aliens paroled into the U.S. for longer than 1 year are treated as immigrants (i.e. somewhat broader, but still limited, eligibility).

Senate amendment

Aliens who have been paroled into the U.S. for a period of less than 1 year are not considered to be lawfully present for benefits purposes and therefore are generally ineligible for benefits. (Aliens who have been paroled into the U.S. for a period of 1 year or longer are considered to be lawfully present.)

Conference agreement

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment, as described in section 2 above.

4. LIMITED ELIGIBILITY OF LAWFULLY PRESENT ALIENS (OTHER THAN NONIMMIGRANTS) FOR FEDERAL BENEFITS (SECTIONS 402, 403 AND 432)

A. In General

Present law

With the exception of certain buy-in rights under Medicare, immigrants (or aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence) are eligible for major Federal benefits, but the ability of some immigrants to meet the needs tests for SSI, AFDC, and food stamps may be affected by the sponsor-to-alien deeming provisions discussed below. Refugees, asylees, and parolees also generally are eligible. Benefits are permitted under AFDC, SSI, unemployment compensation, and nonemergency Medicaid to other aliens permanently residing in the U.S. under color of law (PRUCOL).

House bill

With certain specific exceptions noted below, any alien who is lawfully present in the U.S. shall not be eligible for any of the following Federal means-tested public benefits programs (except as they provide noncash, in-kind emergency services): Supplemental Security Income, Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, Social Services Block Grant (Title XX), Medicaid, and Food Stamps.

Under programs other than the foregoing 5 major benefits programs, the eligibility of lawfully present aliens (other than nonimmigrants) for benefits would continue to be governed by current law as modified by the sponsor-to-alien deeming provisions discussed below. The Attorney General is to determine which aliens are "lawfully present" and is not bound in doing so by current interpretations of "PRUCOL", or "permanently residing under color of law."

Senate amendment

Except for specific classes noted below, all aliens are to be denied SSI.

Except for specific classes and programs noted below, all aliens arriving after enactment are ineligible for all Federal needs-based assistance for 5 years after entry.

Except for specific classes and programs noted below, States may deny noncitizens need-based assistance funded by the Federal Government (e.g., Temporary Assistance for Needy Families and similar block grants).

For lawfully present aliens who are in the United States on the date of enactment and who have been here 5 years, current rules will continue to apply to programs other than SSI, except as eligibility may be affected by the State option to deny noncitizens needs-based assistance funded by Federal funds.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with the following modifications:

(1) current resident aliens and those arriving after enactment (with the exception of the specific classes described below) may not receive SSI or food stamps until attaining citizenship or working long enough (that is, at least 10 years) to qualify for Social Security retirement benefits;

(2) aliens have no entitlement to benefits;

(3) States have the option of providing benefits to lawfully present aliens under the TANF, Medicaid, or Title XX programs; and

(4) new entrants are denied benefits under all Federal means-tested programs for five years after their entry into the United States with the exception of those programs described in section (4)(B) below.

B. Excepted Programs

Present law

Not applicable (See above.)

House bill

Only exception for non-cash, in-kind emergency services, as described above.

Senate amendment

The 5-year bar on Federally-funded assistance to new arrivals does not apply to:

(1) emergency medical services under Medicaid;

(2) short-term emergency disaster relief;

(3) assistance under the National School Lunch Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1996;

(4) the Head Start program;

(5) foster care and adoption assistance (but foster parents or adoptive parents cannot be aliens who are ineligible for benefits due to this provision);

(6) public health assistance for immunizations and, if found necessary by HHS, testing for and treatment of communicable diseases; and

(7) programs specified by the Attorney General that

(i) deliver services at the community level,

(ii) do not condition assistance on the recipient's income or resources, and

(iii) are necessary to protect life, safety, or public health (e.g. soup kitchens).

States may deny needs-based assistance funded by the Federal government to all noncitizens except (1) programs described above in 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, or 7; or (2) assistance to noncitizens in the classes described below.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that Head Start is not an excepted program but the following programs are excepted: (1) programs of student assistance under titles IV, V, IX, and X of the Higher Education Act of 1965, and (2) means-tested programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

C. Excepted Classes

Present law

Not applicable. (See above.)

House bill

Excepted are:

(i) refugees during their first 5 years in the U.S.;

(ii) aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the U.S. for permanent residence, are over 75 years of age, and have resided in U.S. for at least 5 years;

(iii) honorably discharged veterans and active duty personnel or their spouses and unmarried dependent children lawfully residing in any State or territory or possession of the U.S.;

(iv) aliens lawfully residing in any State or Territory or Possession of the U.S. during the first year of enactment; and

(v) immigrants who are unable to comply with naturalization requirements because of disability or mental impairment.

Senate amendment

Excepted are:

(i) refugees during their first 5 years in the U.S.;

(ii) honorably discharged veterans (if determined by the Attorney General to be lawfully present), and their spouses and unmarried dependent children;

(iii) aliens receiving SSI benefits on the date of enactment (whose eligibility would end) will remain eligible for SSI until January 1, 1997;

(iv) asylees (including those who have had deportation stayed because it would return them to a country which would persecute them) during their first 5 years in the U.S.;

(v) noncitizens who have worked long enough to be fully insured for Social Security or disability insurance benefits are exempt from the ban on SSI and the prospective 5 year ban; and

(vi) agencies may exempt individuals who have been battered or subjected to extreme cruelty from the denial of State-administered Federal benefits (and the sponsor-alien "deeming" provision discussed below) if the resulting denial of assistance will endanger their well-being.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment so that the following classes are excepted:

(1) refugees (during their first 5 years in the U.S.), asylees (for 5 years after being adjudicated as an asylee), and aliens whose deportation has been withheld (during their first 5 years after their deportation has been withheld);

(2) with regard to current residents and with regard to noncitizens arriving after the date of enactment after their fifty year in the country, aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the U.S. for permanent residence and have worked at least 40 quarters (that is, at least 10 years which is currently the criteria for eligibility for Social Security retirement benefits);

(3) honorably discharged veterans and active duty personnel or their spouses and unmarried dependent children lawfully residing in any State, territory, or possession of the U.S.; and

(4) lawfully present aliens receiving SSI or food stamps on the date of enactment, whose eligibility would end January 1, 1997.

D. Effective Date(s)

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

In general, applies to applicants for benefits after the date of enactment. For current residents of the U.S. on the date of enactment, restriction on eligibility does not apply until 1 year after enactment.

Senate amendment

In general, applies to benefits on or after the date of enactment. Current SSI recipients lose eligibility after January 1, 1997. The Attorney General must adopt regulations to verify the eligibility of applicants for Federal benefits no later than 18 months after enactment. States must have a verification system that complies with these regulations within 24 months of their adoption.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that the eligibility of current resident noncitizens receiving SSI and food stamps on the date of enactment ends for months beginning on or after January 1, 1997.

E. Reapplication

Present law

An individual who is eligible for SSI but who thereafter becomes ineligible for a period of 12 consecutive months must reapply for benefits.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Individuals receiving SSI benefits on the date of enactment who are notified of their termination of eligibility may reapply for benefits within 4 months after the date of enactment. The Commissioner of Social Security shall determine within 1 year of enactment the eligibility of individuals who reapply.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

5. NOTIFICATION (SECTION 404)

Present law

Under regulation, individual advance written notice must be given of an intent to suspend, reduce, or terminate SSI benefits.

House bill

Each Federal Agency that administers an affected program shall post information and provide general notification to the public and to program recipients of changes regarding eligibility.

Senate amendment

The Commissioner of Social Security shall notify noncitizens made ineligible for SSI benefits within 3 months after the date of enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

6. VERIFICATION (SECTIONS 433 AND 435) AND INFORMATION SHARING (SECTION 404)

Present law

State agencies that administer most major Federal programs with alienage restrictions generally use the SAVE (Systematic Alien Verification for Entitlements) system to verify the immigration status of aliens applying for benefits.

AFDC and SSI require safeguards that restrict the use of disclosure of information concerning applicants or recipients to purposes connected to the administration of needs-based Federal programs.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Attorney General must adopt regulations to verify the lawful presence of applicants for Federal benefits no later than 18 months after enactment. States must have a verification system that complies with these regulations within 24 months of their adoption.

The agencies which administer SSI, housing assistance programs under the United States Housing Act of 1937, or block grants for temporary assistance for needy families (the successor program to AFDC) are required to furnish information to the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) about aliens they know to be unlawfully in the United States at least 4 times annually and upon INS request.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that no State or local government may be restricted from communicating with the INS about the immigration status of a noncitizen in the U.S.

SUBTITLE B—ELIGIBILITY FOR STATE AND LOCAL PUBLIC BENEFITS PROGRAMS

7. INELIGIBILITY OF ILLEGAL ALIENS FOR STATE AND LOCAL PUBLIC BENEFITS PROGRAMS (SECTIONS 411 AND 435)

Present law

Under Plyler v. Doe (457 U.S. 202 (1982)), States may not deny illegal alien children access to a public elementary education. However, the narrow 5-4 Supreme Court decision may imply that illegal aliens may be denied at least some State benefits and that Congress may influence the eligibility of illegal aliens for State benefits. Many, but not all, State general assistance laws currently deny illegal aliens means-tested general assistance.

House bill

No alien who is not lawfully present in the U.S. shall be eligible for any State and local means-tested public benefits programs (see definitions below). The only exception is emergency medical services.

Senate amendment

No provision affects programs wholly administered and funded by State and local governments. Aliens who are not lawfully present are ineligible for benefits paid with Federal funds under State-administered programs (or paid with State funds pursuant to such programs).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with a modification that States are permitted to affirmatively enact a State law after the date of enactment of this Act that specifies that such State wished to provide State and local benefits to illegal aliens.

No current State law, State constitutional provision, State executive order or decision of any State or Federal court shall provide a sufficient basis for a State to be relieved of the requirement to deny benefits to illegal aliens in subsection (a). Laws, ordinances, or executive orders passed by county, city or other local officials will not allow those entities to provide benefits to illegal aliens. Only the affirmative enactment of a law by a State legislature and signed by the Governor after the date of enactment of this Act, that references this provision, will meet the requirements of this section.

The phrase "affirmatively provides for such eligibility" means that the State law enacted must specify that illegal aliens are eligible for State or local benefits as defined in subsection (c). Persons residing under color of law shall be considered to be aliens unlawfully present in the U.S. and are prohibited from receiving State or local benefits, as defined in subsection (c), regardless of the enactment of any State law.

The conference agreement provides that no State or local government entity shall prohibit, or in any way restrict, any entity or official from sending to or receiving from the INS information regarding the immigration status of an alien or the presence, whereabouts, or activities of illegal aliens. It does not require, in and of itself, any government agency or law enforcement official to communicate with the INS.

The conferees intend to give State and local officials the authority to communicate with the INS regarding the presence, whereabouts, or activities of illegal aliens. This provision is designed to prevent any State or local law, ordinance, executive order, policy, constitutional provision, or decision of any Federal or State court that prohibits or in any way restricts any communication between State and local officials and the INS. The conferees believe that immigration law enforcement is as high a priority as other aspects of Federal law enforcement, and that illegal aliens do not have the right to remain in the U.S. undetected and unapprehended.

8. INELIGIBILITY OF NONIMMIGRANTS FOR STATE AND LOCAL PUBLIC BENEFITS PROGRAMS (SECTION 411)

Present law

Currently, there is no Federal law barring nonimmigrants from State and local needs-based programs. In general, States are restricted in denying assistance to nonimmigrants where the denial is inconsistent with the terms under which the nonimmigrants were admitted. Where a denial of benefits is not inconsistent with Federal immigration law, however, States have broader authority to deny benefits and States often do deny certain benefits to nonimmigrants. Also, aliens in most nonimmigrant categories generally may have difficulty qualifying for many State and local benefits because of requirements that they be State "residents."

House bill

No alien who is lawfully present in the U.S. as a nonimmigrant shall be eligible for any State and local means-tested public benefit programs. Exceptions for: non-cash emergency assistance (including emergency medical services) aliens granted asylum, and certain temporary agricultural workers who are treated as immigrants for purposes of application for State and local means-tested benefits (see below). Aliens paroled into the U.S. for a period of less than 1 year are considered to be nonimmigrants under this part.

Senate amendment

No provision affects programs wholly administered and funded by State or local governments. Nonimmigrants are not considered to be lawfully present for Federal benefits purposes and are thus ineligible for benefits paid with Federal funds under State-administered programs (or paid with State funds pursuant to such programs).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with the modification that States may determine the eligibility of nonimmigrants and short-term parolees for State and local benefits.

9. STATE AUTHORITY TO LIMIT ELIGIBILITY OF IMMIGRANTS FOR STATE AND LOCAL MEANS-TESTED PUBLIC BENEFITS PROGRAMS (SECTION 412)

Present law

Under Graham v. Richardson (403 U.S. 365 (1971)), States are barred from denying legal permanent residents from State-funded assistance that is provided to equally needy citizens.

House bill

States are authorized to determine eligibility requirements for aliens who are lawfully present in the U.S. for any State and local means-tested public benefit program (other than non-cash emergency assistance, including emergency medical services), with exception of:

(i) refugees during their first 5 years in the U.S.;

(ii) Aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the U.S. for permanent residence, are over 75 years of age, and have resided in U.S. for five years;

(iii) Honorably discharged veterans and active duty personnel or their spouses and unmarried dependent children lawfully residing in any State or territory or possession of the U.S.; and

(iv) Aliens lawfully residing in any State or Territory or possession of the U.S. during the first year after the date of enactment. Aliens lawfully present would remain eligible for emergency medical services.

In addition to enhancing State discretion to impose alienage restrictions, eligibility for State and local needs-based benefits also would be restricted by application of new sponsor-to-alien deeming requirements discussed below.

Senate amendment

No provision restricts benefits wholly funded by State or local governments, but States may use the sponsor-alien deeming provisions, described below, to determine whether a sponsored individual qualifies for assistance under such a program.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, except that excepted classes are modified so that they are identical to those excepted under (4)(C) for the purposes of the denial of Federal benefits for legal permanent resident noncitizens.

SUBTITLE C—ATTRIBUTION OF INCOME AND AFFIDAVITS OF SUPPORT

10. REQUIREMENTS FOR AFFIDAVITS OF SUPPORT (SECTIONS 423 AND 424)

A. When Required and Enforceability

Present law

Administrative authorities may request an affidavit of support on behalf of an alien seeking permanent residency. Requirements for affidavits of support are not specified under current law.

Under the Immigration and Nationality Act, an alien who is likely to become a public charge may be excluded from entry unless this restriction is waived, as is the case for refugees. By regulation and administrative practice, the State Department and the Immigration and Naturalization Service permit a prospective permanent resident alien (also immigrant or green card holder) who otherwise would be excluded as a public charge (i.e., insufficient means or prospective income) to overcome exclusion through an affidavit of support or similar document executed by a individual in the U.S. Individuals who execute affidavits of support commonly are called sponsors, even though that term also is used under immigration practice to refer to individuals and other entities who undertake various other acts (e.g., file a visa preference petition for a relative or prospective employee or undertake to resettle individuals who enter in refugee status) and who may or may not also execute affidavits of support. About one-half of the aliens who obtain legal permanent resident status have had affidavits of support filed on their behalf.

Various State court decisions and decisions by immigration courts have held that these affidavits, as currently constituted, do not impose a binding obligation on the sponsor to reimburse State agencies providing aid to the sponsored alien.

House bill

When affidavits of support are required, they must comply with the following:

(A) no affidavit of support may be accepted to overcome a public charge exclusion unless the affidavit is executed as a contract that is legally enforceable against the sponsor by the Federal government and by any State or local government with respect to any means-tested benefits paid to the sponsored alien before the alien becomes a citizen. However, affidavits of support are not to be construed to provide any right to sponsored aliens;

(B) any Federal, State or local means-tested benefits paid to sponsored alien;

(C) to qualify to execute an affidavit of support, an individual must be within the definition of sponsor set out in item G(1), below;

(D) governmental entities that provide benefits may seek reimbursement up to 10 years after a sponsored alien last receives benefits. In the affidavit of support, the sponsor must agree to submit to the jurisdiction of any Federal or State court regarding reimbursement of the cost of benefits received by the alien; and

(E) sponsorship extends until alien becomes a citizen.

Senate amendment

When affidavits of support are required, they must comply with the following:

(A) no affidavit of support may be relied upon to overcome a public charge exclusion unless the affidavit is executed as a contract that is legally enforceable against the sponsor by the sponsored alien and by Federal, State, and local governmental entities that provide the sponsored alien with means-tested assistance during the support period described below;

(B) programs for which reimbursement shall be requested are: (1) AFDC or its successor; (2) Medicaid; (3) Food Stamps; (4) SSI; (5) any State general assistance program; and (6) any other Federal, State or local need-based program. However, governmental entities cannot seek reimbursement with respect to (1) emergency medical services under Medicaid; (2) short-term emergency disaster relief; (3) assistance provided under the National School Lunch Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; (4) the Head Start program; (5) public health assistance for immunizations and, if determined necessary by HHS, testing for or treatment of communicable diseases; and (6) programs specified by the Attorney General that (i) deliver services at the community level, (ii) do not condition assistance on the recipient's income or resources, and (iii) are necessary to protect life, safety, or public health (e.g. soup kitchens);

(C) to qualify to execute an affidavit of support, an individual must be within the definition of sponsor set out in item G(1), below;

(D) governmental entities may seek reimbursement of other means-tested assistance up to 10 years after a sponsored alien last receives benefits. In the affidavit of support, the sponsor must agree to submit to the jurisdiction of any Federal or State court regarding reimbursement of the cost of benefits received by the alien; and

(E) sponsor must agree in the affidavit of support to provide sufficient financial support so that the sponsored individual will not become a public charge until the individual has worked in the U.S. for 40 qualifying quarters, regardless of whether the individual chooses to naturalize or not. A qualifying quarter is a 3-month period (1) which counts as a quarter for the purposes of social security coverage, (2) during which the individual did not receive needs-based assistance, and (3) which occurs in a tax year for which the individual had income tax liability.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment as follows:

When affidavits of support are required, they must comply with the following:

(A) no affidavit of support may be accepted to overcome a public charge exclusion unless the affidavit is executed as a contract that is legally enforceable against the sponsor by the Federal government with respect to any means-tested benefits paid to the sponsored alien before the alien becomes a citizen. However, affidavits of support are to to be construed to provide any right to sponsored aliens;

(B) programs for which reimbursement shall be requested are: (1) AFDC or its successor; (2) Medicaid; (3) Food Stamps; (4) SSI; (5) any State general assistance program; and (6) any other Federal, State or local need-based program. However, governmental entities cannot seek reimbursement with respect to (1) emergency medical services under Medicaid; (2) short-term emergency disaster relief; (3) assistance provided under the National School Lunch Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; (4) payments for foster care and adoption assistance under part B of title IV of the Social Security Act; (5) public health assistance for immunizations and, if determined necessary by HHS, testing for or treatment of communicable diseases; (6) programs specified by the Attorney General that (i) deliver services at the community level, (ii) do no condition assistance on the recipient's income or resources, and (iii) are necessary to protect life, safety, or public health (e.g. soup kitchens); and (7) postsecondary education benefits (the conference report includes a provision that, notwithstanding sections 427(a)(2)(A), 428B(a), 428C(b)(4)(A), and 464(c)(1)(E), would prohibit a lawfully admitted alien from receiving a student loan authorized under Title IV of the Higher Education Act unless the loan is endorsed and cosigned by the alien's sponsor or by another individual who is a United States citizen. The conferees recognize that this provision is not currently a feature of the Higher Education Act and are aware that this requirement will necessitate modifications to the regulations that govern Federal student aid, and the application forms through which students apply. The conferees expect the Department of Education to minimize the regulatory burden on students and schools that may attend this provision, and instruct the Department to work closely with the higher education community to develop regulations and forms to implement this requirement);

(C) to qualify to execute an affidavit of support, an individual must be within the definition of sponsor set out in item G(1) below;

(D) governmental entities that provide benefits may seek reimbursement up to 10 years after a sponsored alien last receives benefits. In the affidavit of support, the sponsor must agree to submit to the jurisdiction of any Federal or State court regarding reimbursement of the cost of benefits received by the alien; and

(E) sponsorship extends until alien becomes a citizen.

The allowance for treatment of communicable diseases is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply where absolutely necessary to prevent the spread of such diseases. This is only a stop-gap measure until the deportation of a person or persons unlawfully here. It is not intended to provide authority for continued treatment of such diseases for a long term.

The allowance for emergency medical services under Medicaid is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply to medical care that is strictly of an emergency nature, such as medical treatment administered in an emergency room, critical care unit or intensive care unit. The conferees do not intend that emergency medical services include pre-natal or delivery care assistance that is not strictly of an emergency nature as specified herein.

B. Forms

Present law

No statutory provision. The Department of Justice issues a form (Form I-134) that complies with current sponsorship guidelines.

House bill

The Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of State and the Secretary of HHS shall formulate an affidavit of support within 90 days after enactment, consistent with this section.

Senate amendment

The Attorney General, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of HHS shall jointly formulate an affidavit of support with 90 days after enactment, consistent with this section.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

C. Statutory Construction

Present law

No provision.

House bill

Nothing in this section shall be construed to grant third party beneficiary rights to any sponsored alien under an affidavit of support.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment expressly requires that affidavits of support permit sponsored individuals to enforce support obligations of their sponsors as contained in the affidavits.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

D. Notification of Change of Address

Present law

There is no express requirement under current administrative practice that sponsors inform welfare agencies of a change in address. However, a sponsored alien who applies for benefits for which deeming is required must provide various information regarding the alien's sponsor.

House bill

Until they no longer are potentially liable for reimbursement of benefits paid to sponsored aliens, sponsors must notify welfare agencies of any change of their address within 30 days of moving. Failure to notify may result in a civil penalty of up to $2000 or, if the failure occurs after knowledge that the sponsored alien has received a reimbursable benefit, of up to $5000.

Senate amendment

Until they no longer are potentially liable for reimbursement of benefits paid to sponsored individuals, sponsors must notify the Attorney General and the State, district, territory or possession in which the sponsored individual resides of any change of their address within 30 days of moving. Failure to notify may result in a civil penalty of up to $2000 or, if the failure occurs after knowledge that the sponsored individual has received a reimbursable benefit, of up to $5000.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

E. Reimbursement Procedures

Present law

Various State court decisions and decisions by immigration courts have held that these affidavits, as currently constituted, do not impose a binding obligation on the sponsor to reimburse State agencies providing aid to the sponsored alien.

House bill

If a sponsored alien receives any benefit under any means-tested public assistance program, the appropriate Federal, State, or local official shall request reimbursement by the sponsor in the amount of such assistance. Thereafter the official may seek reimbursement in court if the sponsor fails to respond within 45 days of the request that the sponsor is willing to begin repayments. The official also may seek reimbursement through the courts within 60 days after a sponsor fails to comply with the terms of repayment. The Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of HHS, shall prescribe regulations on requesting reimbursement. No action may be brought later than 10 years after the alien last received benefits.

Senate amendment

Upon notification that a sponsored individual has received a reimbursable need-based benefit (see above), the appropriate government official shall request reimbursement in accordance with the same procedures and limitations that are in the House bill. The Commissioner of Social Security is to prescribe regulations for requesting reimbursement from sponsors, and such regulations must include the notification of sponsors (at their last known address) by certified mail.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

F. Jurisdiction

Present law

State law sets forth which types of cases its courts will hear, subject to due process requirements on minimal connections between activities, people, or property within the State and the matter being litigated.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

No State court shall decline for lack of jurisdiction to hear any action brought against a sponsor for reimbursement for the cost of any benefit if the sponsored individual received public assistance while residing in the State.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conferees intend that both Federal and State courts have jurisdiction over reimbursement actions against a sponsor.

G. Definitions

Present law

No provision.

House bill

A "Sponsor" is an individual who (1) is a citizen or national of the U.S. or an alien who is lawfully admitted to the U.S. for permanent residence; (2) is at least 18 years of age; and (3) resides in any State.

A "Means-Tested Public Benefits Program" is a program of public benefits of the Federal, State or local government in which eligibility or the amount of benefits or both are determined on the basis of income, resources, or financial need.

Senate amendment

A "Sponsor" is an individual who (1) is a citizen or national of the U.S. or an alien who is lawfully admitted to the U.S. for permanent residence; (2) is at least 18 years of age; (3) resides in any State or U.S. territory; and (4) is able to demonstrate (through evidence which includes attested copies of tax returns for the 2 most recent tax years) the means to maintain an income equal to 200 percent of the Federal poverty line for the individual and the individual's family, including the person sponsored.

"Federal Poverty Line" has the same meaning as in section 673(2) of the Community Services Block Grant Act.

A "Qualifying Quarter" is a 3-month period (1) in which the sponsored individual earned at least the minimum necessary for the period to count as one of 40 calendar quarters required to qualify for Social Security retirement benefits; (2) during which the sponsored individual did not receive need-based public assistance; and (3) which falls within a tax year for which the sponsored individual had income tax liability.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, except that the sponsor is not required to demonstrate the means to maintain an income equal to 200 percent of the poverty level and the Senate recedes on the conditions that a qualifying quarter is (1) one in which the sponsored individual did not receive need-based public assistance, and (2) one which falls within a tax year for which the sponsored individual has tax liability. The sponsor must also be the person petitioning for the alien's admission, and reside in one of the 50 States or the District of Columbia.

H. Clerical Amendment

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

A minor clerical amendment.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

I. Effective Date

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

The changes regarding affidavits of support shall apply to affidavits of support executed no earlier than 60 days or later than 90 days after the Attorney General promulgates the form.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

11. ATTRIBUTION OF SPONSOR'S INCOME AND RESOURCES TO SPONSORED IMMIGRANTS (SECTIONS 421 AND 422)

A. Federal Benefits

Present law

In determining whether an alien meets the means test for Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC), Supplemental Security Income (SSI), and Food Stamps, the resources and income of an individual who filed an affidavit of support for the alien (and the income and resources of the individual's spouse) are taken into account during a designated period after entry.

House bill

During the applicable deeming period, the income and resources of an individual who files a binding affidavit of support (as required above) for an alien (and the income and resources of the individual's spouse) are taken into account under all Federal means-tested programs (with the exception of housing-related assistance) in determining a sponsored alien's neediness. Current law remains effective for aliens whose sponsors filed affidavits before the new affidavit requirements become effective (60–90 days after enactment).

Senate amendment

During the applicable deeming period, the income and resources of an individual who filed an affidavit of support for an alien (and the income and resources of the individual's spouse) are to be taken into account under all Federally-funded means-tested programs (with the exception of the programs below) in determining the sponsored individual's neediness.

Excepted programs are (1) emergency Medicaid services; (2) short-term emergency disaster relief; (3) assistance provided under the National School Lunch Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; (4) the Head Start program; (5) public health assistance for immunizations and, if determined by HHS, testing for or treatment of communicable diseases; and (6) programs specified by the Attorney General that (i) deliver services at the community level, (ii) do not condition assistance on the recipient's income or resources, and (iii) are necessary to protect life, safety, or public health (e.g. soup kitchens).

Individuals who are exempt from deeming include (1) honorably discharged legal alien veterans and their spouses and unmarried children; (2) refugees; (3) asylees (including aliens who have had their deportation stayed because it would return them to a country which will persecute them); and (4) individuals who have been battered or subjected to extreme cruelty, if application of deeming would endanger their well-being.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except that post-secondary education is included as an excepted program, Head Start is not included as an excepted program, individuals who have worked 40 quarters as defined in this title are included as an excepted class, and battered individuals are not included as an excepted class.

The allowance for treatment of communicable diseases is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply where absolutely necessary to prevent the spread of such diseases. This is only a stop-gap measure until the deportation of a person or persons unlawfully here. It is not intended to provide authority for continued treatment of such diseases for a long term.

The allowance for emergency medical services under Medicaid is very narrow. The conferees intend that it only apply to medical care that is strictly of an emergency nature, such as medical treatment administered in an emergency room, critical care unit, or intensive care unit. The conferees do not intend that emergency medical services include pre-natal or delivery care assistance that is not strictly of an emergency nature as specified herein.

B. Amount of Income and Resources Deemed

Present law

While the offset formulas vary among the programs, the amount of income and resources deemed under AFDC, SSI, and Food Stamps is reduced by certain offsets to provide for some of the sponsor's own needs.

House bill

The full income and resources of the sponsor and the sponsor's spouse are deemed to be that of the sponsored alien.

Senate amendment

If an agency determines that a sponsored individual would not be able to obtain food and shelter without the agency's assistance (taking into account the income and resources actually provided to the individual by the sponsor and others), then deeming will not apply for a period of 12 months and the agency need take into account during this period only the amount of support the sponsor actually provides.

If the address of the sponsor is unknown to the sponsored individual, then assistance is provided until 12 months after the sponsor is located.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

C. Length of Deeming Period

Present law

For AFDC and Food Stamps, sponsor-to-alien deeming applies to a sponsored alien seeking assistance within 3 years of entry. Until September 1996, sponsor-to-alien deeming applies to a sponsored alien seeking SSI within 5 years of entry.

House bill

For aliens whose sponsors have filed binding affidavits of support as required above, the sponsors' income and resources are deemed to the alien until the alien becomes a citizen. Current law remains effective for aliens whose sponsors filed affidavits before the new affidavit requirements become effective (60–90 days after enactment).

Senate amendment

Deeming applies until the immigrant has worked 40 qualifying quarters (the period of time future sponsors must agree to support the immigrant) or for 5 years from the alien's arrival in the United States (for current noncitizens), whichever is longer. Deeming continues until the above requirements are met, regardless of whether the immigrant naturalizes or not. [A qualifying quarter is a 3-month period (1) in which the sponsored individual earned at least the minimum necessary for the period to count as one of 40 calendar quarters required to qualify for Social Security retirement benefits; (2) during which the sponsored individual did not receive need-based public assistance; and (3) which falls within a tax year for which the sponsored individual had income tax liability.]

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with the modification described in section A. above that sponsored noncitizens who have worked at least 40 quarters as defined in this title are excepted from deeming requirements.

D. State and Local Benefits

Present law

The highest courts of at least 2 States have held that the Supreme Court decision barring State discrimination against legal aliens in providing State benefits (Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 365 (1971)) prohibits State sponsor-to-alien deeming requirements for State benefits.

House bill

In determining the eligibility and amount of benefits of an alien for any State or local means-tested public benefit program, the income and resources of the alien shall be deemed to include the income and resources of their sponsor (and their sponsor's spouse). Housing related assistance continues to be treated as under current law.

Senate amendment

With the exception of those programs exempted from all benefit restrictions (see above) and those aliens exempt from deeming requirements, States and local governments may deem a sponsor's income and resources (and those of the sponsor's spouse) to a sponsored individual in determining eligibility for and the amount of needs-based benefits. State deeming provisions must also provide for temporary assistance if the sponsor is not assisting the sponsored individual or cannot be located.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except that there is no provision for temporary assistance if the sponsor is not assisting the sponsored individual or can not be located.

SUBTITLE D—GENERAL PROVISIONS

12. DEFINITIONS (SECTION 431)

A. In General

Present law

Federal assistance programs that have alien eligibility restrictions generally reference specific classes defined in the Immigration and Nationality Act.

House bill

Unless otherwise provided, the terms used in this title have the same meaning as defined in Section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

B. Lawful Presence

Present law

Some programs allow benefits for otherwise eligible aliens who are "permanently residing under color of law (PRUCOL)." This term is not defined under the Immigration and Nationality Act, and there has been some inconsistency in determining which classes of aliens fit within the PRUCOL standard.

House bill

For purposes of this Title, the determination of whether an alien is lawfully present in the U.S. shall be made in accordance with regulations issued by the Attorney General. An alien shall not be considered to be lawfully present in the U.S. merely because the alien may be considered to be permanently residing in the U.S. under color of law ("PRUCOL") for purposes of any particular program.

Senate amendment

An individual is lawfully present if the individual is a citizen, non-citizen national (i.e. American Samoan), permanent resident alien, refugee, asylee (including an alien who has had his/her deportation stayed because it would return him/her to a country which would persecute him/her), or an alien who has been paroled into the U.S. by the Attorney General for at least 1 year. Individuals who are not lawfully present are ineligible for any Federal benefit.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with a modification that eligibility is determined by specific classes of aliens, not whether noncitizens are "lawfully present."

C. State

Present law

There is no single definition of "State" for purposes of alien eligibility under Federal assistance programs. The Immigration and Nationality Act defines "State" to include the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States.

House bill

The term "State" includes the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Guam, the Northern Mariana Islands, and American Samoa.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

D. Public Benefits Programs

Present law

No provision.

House bill

A "Means-Tested Program" is a program of public benefits of the Federal, State, or local government in which eligibility for benefits under the program, or the amount of benefits, or both, are determined on basis of income, resources or financial need.

A "Federal Means-Tested Public Benefits Program" is a means-tested public benefit program of (or contributed to by) the Federal Government under which the Federal Government establishes standards for eligibility.

A "State Means-Tested Public Benefits Program" is a means-tested program of a State or political subdivision under which the State or political subdivision specifies the standards of eligibility, and does not include any Federal means-tested public benefits program.

Senate amendment

"Federal Benefit" means any grant, contract loan, professional or commercial license, retirement benefit, health or disability benefit, public housing, food stamps, higher education benefits, unemployment benefit, or any similar benefit provided by a Federal agency or with appropriated Federal funds. (Individuals who are not lawfully present are ineligibility for Federal benefits.)

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

13. CONSTRUCTION (SECTION 434)

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

Nothing in this title shall be construed as addressing alien eligibility for governmental programs that are not means-tested public benefits programs.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment's bar to Federal benefits for individuals who are not lawfully present covers a wide range of contracts, grants, licenses, and other assistance that is not means-tested.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with a clarification that the subtitle is silent on alien eligibility for a basic public elementary education as determined by the U.S. Supreme Court in Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202 (1982).

SUBTITLE E—CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

14. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS RELATING TO ASSISTED HOUSING (SECTION 441)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

A series of technical and conforming amendments.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

TITLE V. REDUCTIONS IN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT POSITIONS

1. REDUCTIONS (SECTION 501)

Present law

The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) reports that 118 employees in the Office of Family Assistance (OFA) work on AFDC and 209 (full-time equivalent positions) in regional offices of the Administration on Children and Families. The OFA employees include 30 who spend some time interpreting AFDC/JOBS policy and participating with States in State plan development.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Requires the HHS Secretary to reduce the Department work force by 245 equivalent (FTE) positions related to the AFDC program (which the amendment would replace) and by 60 full-time equivalent managerial positions. It also requires the Secretaries of Agriculture, Education, Labor, HHS, and Housing and Urban Development to report to Congress by December 31, 1995 on the number of (FTE) positions required to carry out "covered" activities before and after enactment of the amendment and to reduce the number of employees by the difference in numbers. A covered activity is defined as one that the Department must carry out under a provision of this Act or a provision of Federal law that is amended or repealed by the Act.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with a modification that the reductions take place over a two-year period.

2. REDUCTIONS IN FEDERAL BUREAUCRACY (SECTION 502)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

This section also provides for a reduction of 75 percent of the FTE positions "at each such Department" that relate to any direct spending program, or program funded through discretionary spending, that is converted into a block grant program under the Act (but it calls for this action to be taken by the HHS Secretary alone to each such Department).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate agreement.

3. REDUCING PERSONNEL IN WASHINGTON, D.C. AREA (SECTION 503)

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

In making reductions the Secretaries are encouraged to reduce personnel in the Washington, D.C. area office before reducing field personnel.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

TITLE VI. HOUSING

1. CEILING RENTS

Present law

The rent paid by a public housing tenant is the greater of 30 percent of "adjusted" monthly income or 10 percent of gross income. Adjusted income deducts from annual gross income $480 per dependent, $400 for an elderly family, excess medical costs for an elderly family, and costs of child care and handicapped assistance. Regulations exclude some items from "income" by definition, among them: irregular gifts, amounts that reimburse medical expenses, earnings of children, and payments received for the care of foster children. There is no ceiling on rent paid by the tenant. When a tenant's income rises, his/her rent increases, usually by 30 cents per extra dollar of income.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment would permit a public housing agency to establish a ceiling on monthly rent charged to a tenant. The amendment stipulates that the amount must reflect the reasonable rental value of the unit, as compared with similar types and sizes of dwelling units in the market area, must at least equal the monthly cost to operate the housing, and must not exceed the amount payable as rent under current law (30 percent of adjusted income, or 10 percent of gross income).

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (no provision).

2. DEFINITION OF ADJUSTED INCOME FOR PUBLIC HOUSING

Present law

Under current law adjusted income deducts from annual gross income $480 per dependent, $400 for an elderly family, excess medical costs for an elderly family, and costs of child care and handicapped assistance. Regulations exclude some items from "income" by definition, among them: irregular gifts, amounts that reimburse medical expenses, earnings of children, and payments received for the care of foster children.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The amendment would permit a public housing agency to disregard up to 20 percent of the earned income of the family, thus reducing its rental payment. It provides that if a housing agency offers this earnings incentive, the operating subsidy for the unit shall take no account of the resulting change in rental income until actual subsidies equal those that would have been received if all earnings were counted.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (no provision).

3. FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH OTHER WELFARE AND PUBLIC ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS (SECTION 601)

Present law

See item 7, below.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The amendment would provide that there be no reduction in public or assisted housing rents in response to a tenant's reduced income resulting from non-compliance with welfare or public assistance program requirements; permits reduction where State or local law limits the period during which benefits may be provided.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

4. APPLICABILITY TO INDIAN HOUSING

Present law

The Housing and Urban Development (HUD) Indian Housing Program operates through Indian housing authorities. In general Indian housing authorities are comparable to public housing authorities in structure and function.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Provisions of this title apply to public housing developed or operated pursuant to a contract between the HUD Secretary and an Indian housing authority.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (no provision).

5. IMPLEMENTATION

Present law

No provision.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The Secretary must issue regulations necessary to carry out this title and its amendments.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (no provision).

6. DEMONSTRATION PROJECT FOR ELIMINATION OF TAKE-ONE-TAKE-ALL REQUIREMENT

Present law

A federal rule requires that if a multifamily rental housing owner makes at least one unit available to a person with a section 8 certificate or voucher, the owner cannot refuse another section 8 participant on the sole basis that he has a section 8 subsidy.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Creates a demonstration project in Madison, Wisconsin; the amendment would eliminate a so-called "take-one, take-all" requirement that concerns tenant applicants with section 8 certificates or vouchers.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill (no provision).

7. FRAUD UNDER MEANS-TESTED WELFARE AND PUBLIC ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS (SECTION 602)

Present law

If a family's adjusted cash income declines—no matter what the reason—its housing benefit is increased (that is, its rental payment is decreased, by 30 cents per dollar). This applies to cash income from any source, including means-tested benefit programs. However, the housing programs take no account of noncash income. Thus, if food stamp benefits decline, housing benefits are unaffected.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

The amendment provides that if a person's means-tested benefits from a Federal, State, or local program are reduced because of an act of fraud, their benefits from public or assisted housing (and from food stamps and family assistance) may not be increased in response to the income loss caused by the penalty.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

8. EFFECTIVE DATE (SECTION 603)

Present law

Not applicable.

House bill

No provision.

Senate amendment

Date of enactment.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

TITLE VII. CHILD PROTECTION BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM AND FOSTER CARE AND ADOPTION ASSISTANCE

1. ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM (SECTION 701)

A. Purpose

Present law

Child Welfare Services, now provided for in Title IV–B of the Social Security Act, are designed to help States provide child welfare services, family preservation and community-based family support services, and improve State court procedures related to child welfare.

Title IV–E Foster Care and Title IV–E Adoption Assistance are intended to help States finance foster care and adoption assistance maintenance payments, administration, child placement services, and training related to foster care and adoption assistance.

The purpose of the Title IV–E Independent Living program is to help older foster children make the transition to independent living.

House bill

The House provision replaces Title IV–B and Title IV–E of the Social Security Act and several additional programs (see below) by establishing a block grant to enable eligible States to carry out child protection programs to:

(1) identify and assist families at risk of abusing or neglecting their children;

(2) operate a system for receiving reports of abuse or neglect of children;

(3) investigate families reported to abuse or neglect their children;

(4) provide support, treatment, and family preservation services to families which are, or are at risk of, abusing or neglecting their children;

(5) support children who must be removed from or who cannot live with their families;

(6) make timely decisions about permanent living arrangements for children who must be removed from or who cannot live with their families; and

(7) provide for continuing evaluation and improvement of child protection laws, regulations, and services.

Additional programs to be replaced are: the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act; the Abandoned Infants Assistance Act; adoption opportunities under the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act; family support centers under the McKinney Homeless Assistance Act; grants to improve investigation and prosecution of child abuse cases, and children's advocacy centers under the Victims of Child Abuse Act; crisis nurseries under the Temporary Child Care and Crisis Nurseries Act; and Family Unification under Section 8 of the Housing Act.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment would leave intact child welfare services, foster care, adoption assistance and independent living, which are permanently authorized under Title IV–B and IV–E of the Social Security Act. The Senate amendment would reauthorize the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act; adoption opportunities; abandoned infants assistance; missing children's assistance; investigation and prosecution grants, and children's advocacy centers under the Victims of Child Abuse Act. The amendment would repeal both the Temporary Child Care and Crisis Nurseries Act and the Family Support Centers under the McKinney Homeless Assistance Act.

The Senate amendment gives the Secretary authority under CAPTA to make grants to the States for purposes of assisting the States in improving the child protective service system of each State in:

(1) screening intake, assessing, and investigating of reports of abuse and neglect;

(2) creating and improving the use of multidisciplinary teams and interagency protocols to enhance investigations;

(3) improving case management and delivery of services;

(4) enhancing the general child protection system by improving risk and safety assessment tools and protocols and automation systems;

(5) developing, strengthening, and facilitating training opportunities and requirements for individuals overseeing and providing services to children and their families;

(6) developing and facilitating training protocols for individuals mandated to report child abuse or neglect;

(7) developing, strengthening, and supporting child abuse and neglect prevention, treatment, and research programs in the public and private sectors;

(8) developing, implementing, or operating information and education programs or training programs designed to improve the provision of services to disabled infants with life-threatening conditions; and

(9) developing and enhancing the capacity of community-based programs to integrate shared leadership strategies between parents and professionals to prevent and treat child abuse and neglect at the neighborhood level.

Conference agreement

The Conference agreement establishes a child protection program with three major elements: open-ended entitlements for both foster care and adoption maintenance payments, a Child Protection Block Grant program focusing on prevention and services, and a Child and Family Services Block Grant program that includes research, and demonstrations as well as services. The first block grant (the Child Protection Block Grant) has two components: an entitlement component and a discretionary spending component. Funds for the entitlement component of the block grant are made available by termination of several existing entitlement programs. These include foster care administration, foster care training, adoption assistance administration, adoption assistance training, independent living, and family preservation and support.

The second block grant established by this title is the Child and Family Services Block Grant, replacing the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, the Abandoned Infants Assistance Act, adoption opportunities under the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act, family support centers under the McKinney Homeless Assistance Act, and the Temporary Child Care and Crisis Nurseries Act.

The purpose of the Child Protection Block Grant is to:

(1) identify and assist families at risk of abusing or neglecting their children;

(2) operate a system for receiving reports of abuse or neglect of children;

(3) improve the intake, assessment, screening, and investigation of reports of abuse and neglect;

(4) enhance the general child protective system by improving risk and safety assessment tools and protocols;

(5) improve legal preparation and representation, including procedures for appealing and responding to appeals of substantiated reports of abuse and neglect;

(6) provide support, treatment, and family preservation services to families which are, or are at risk of, abusing or neglecting their children;

(7) support children who must be removed from or who cannot live with their families;

(8) make timely decisions about permanent living arrangements for children who must be removed from or who cannot live with their families;

(9) provide for continuing evaluation and improvement of child protection laws, regulations, and services;

(10) develop and facilitate training protocols for individuals mandated to report child abuse or neglect; and

(11) develop and enhance the capacity of community-based programs to integrate shared leadership strategies between parents and professionals to prevent and treat child abuse and neglect at the neighborhood level.

B. Eligible States

Eligible State

Present law

To be eligible for funding under Title IV-B and IV-E, States must have State plans (developed jointly with the Secretary under title IV-B, and approved by the Secretary under Title IV-E).

House bill

An "Eligible State" is one that, during the 3-year period that ends on October 1 of the fiscal year, has submitted to the Secretary a plan that describes how the State intends to pursue the purposes described above.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV-B or IV-E. Current law would remain intact. See Item 6.I., below, for summary of State eligibility under CAPTA.

Conference agreement

An "Eligible State" is one that has submitted to the Secretary, not later than October 1, 1996 and every three years thereafter, a plan (as described below) which has been signed by the Chief Executive officer of the State.

Outline of child protection program

Present law

States must have a child welfare services plan developed jointly by the Secretary and the relevant State agency which provides for single agency administration and which describes services to be provided and geographic areas where services will be available, among numerous other requirements. To receive their full allotment of incentive funds under Title IV-B, States also must comply with extensive Federal Section 427 child protections. The State plan also must meet many other requirements, such as setting forth a 5-year statement of goals for family preservation and family support and assuring the review of progress toward those goals. For foster care and adoption assistance, States must submit for approval a Title IV-E plan providing for a foster care and adoption assistance program and satisfying numerous requirements. The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act requires States to have in effect a law for reporting known and suspected child abuse and neglect as well as providing for prompt investigation of child abuse and neglect reports, among many other requirements.

House bill

A State plan must include the following outline of the State's Child Protection Program including procedures to be used for:

a. receiving reports of child abuse or neglect;

b. investigating such reports;

c. protecting children in families in which child abuse or neglect is found to have occurred;

d. removing children from dangerous settings;

e. protecting children in foster care;

f. promoting timely adoptions;

g. protecting the rights of families, using adult relatives as the preferred placement for children separated from their parents if such relatives meet all relevant standards;

h. preventing child abuse and neglect; and

i. establishing and responding to citizen review panels.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV-B or IV-E. Current law would remain intact. CAPTA requires a 5-year plan that is coordinated with the State plan for child welfare services and family preservation. For amendments to CAPTA requirements, see Section 6 of this document below.

Conference agreement

A State plan must include information on the Child Protection Program including procedures to be used for:

a. receiving and assessing reports of child abuse or neglect;

b. investigating such reports;

c. with respect to families in which abuse or neglect has been confirmed, providing services or referral for services for families and children where the State makes a determination that the child may safely remain;

d. protecting children by removing them from dangerous settings and ensuring their placement in a safe environment;

e. providing training for individuals mandated to report suspected cases of child abuse or neglect;

f. protecting children in foster care;

g. promoting timely adoptions;

h. protecting the rights of families, using adult relatives as the preferred placement for children separated from their parents if such relatives meet all relevant standards;

i. providing services aimed at preventing child abuse and neglect; and

j. establishing and responding to citizen review panels.

Certifications

Present law

To receive funds under the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, States must have a law in effect that provides for reporting of known and suspected instances of child abuse and neglect and provides immunity from prosecution for reporters of abuse or neglect. States also must have a program to investigate allegations of abuse or neglect, must preserve confidentiality of records, and must provide that every abused or neglected child involved in a court proceeding is represented by a guardian ad litem. To receive funding under Title IV-B and IV-E of the Social Security Act, States must comply with certain procedures for removal of children from their families when necessary, and must develop case plans for each child that are reviewed at least every six months and contain specified information.

House bill

Also included in the submitted plan must be the following certifications;

a. certification of State law requiring reporting of child abuse and neglect;

b. certification of State program to investigate child abuse and neglect cases;

c. certification of State procedures for removal and placement of abused or neglected children;

d. certification of State procedures for developing and reviewing written plans for permanent placement of each child removed from the family that:

(1) specifies the goal for achieving a permanent placement for the child in a timely fashion;

(2) ensures that the plan is reviewed every 6 months; and

(3) ensures that information about the child is gathered regularly and placed in the case record;

e. certification that when the State begins operating under the block grant on or after October 1, 1995, families receiving adoption assistance payments at that time continue to receive adoption assistance payments;

f. certification of State program to provide Independent Living services to 16–19 year old youths (at State option to age 21) who are in the foster care system but have no family to turn to for support;

g. certification of State procedures to respond to reporting of medical neglect of disabled infants; and

h. a declaration of State child welfare goals; States must, within 3 years of the date of passage, report quantifiable information on whether they are making progress toward achieving their self-defined child protection goals. (See Data Collection and Reporting, item G. below.)

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV-B or IV-E. Current law would remain intact. CAPTA requires several certifications, many of which are identical to those outlined for the House bill. For amendments to CAPTA requirements, see Section 6 of this document, below.

Conference agreement

The following certifications must be included in the State plan:

(1) certification of State law requiring reporting of child abuse and neglect;

(2) certification of State procedures for the immediate screening, safety assessment, and prompt investigation of such reports;

(3) certification of State procedures for the removal and placement of abused or neglected children;

(A) specifies the goal for achieving a permanent placement for the child in a timely fashion;

(B) ensures that the plan is reviewed every 6 months; and

(C) ensures that information about the child is gathered regularly and placed in the case record;

(8) certification of State program to provide Independent Living Services to 16–19 year old youths (at State option to age 21) who are in the foster care system but have no family to turn to for support;

(9) certification of State procedures to respond to reporting of medical neglect of disabled infants;

(10) a declaration of quantifiable State child welfare goals;

(11) with respect to fiscal years beginning on April 1, 1996, certification that—

(A) the State has completed an inventory of all children who, before the inventory, had been in foster care under the responsibility of the State for 6 months or more, which determined—

(i) the appropriateness of, and necessity for, the foster care placement;

(ii) whether the child could or should be returned to the parents of the child or should be freed for adoption or other permanent placement; and

(iii) the services necessary to facilitate the return of the child or the placement of the child for adoption or legal guardianship;

(B) is operating to the satisfaction of the Secretary—

(i) a statewide information system on children who are or have been in foster care in the last year,

(ii) a case review system for each child receiving foster care under the supervision of the State;

Determinations

Present law

State Title IV–B plans are developed jointly with the Secretary. State Title IV–E plans must be approved by the Secretary. The Secretary must approve any plan that complies with statutory provisions.

House bill

The Secretary of HHS must determine whether the State plan includes all of the elements required above but cannot add new elements or review the adequacy of State procedures. The Secretary may not require a State to alter its child protection law regarding determination of the adequacy, type, and timing of health care.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Title IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact. See item 6.N., below for description of similar CAPTA provision on medical care.

Conference agreement

The Secretary of HHS must determine whether the State plan includes the required materials and certificates (except material related to the certification of State procedures to respond to reporting of medical neglect of disabled infants). The Secretary cannot add new elements beyond those listed above.

C. Grants to States for Child Protection

Entitlement

Present law

Titles IV–B and IV–E of the Social Security Act contain several types of funding, including substantial entitlement funding, for helping States provide assistance to troubled families and their children.

House bill

The block grant money is guaranteed funding to States. Each eligible State is entitled to receive from the Secretary an amount equal to the State share of the Child Protection Grant amount for fiscal years 1996 through 2000.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Title IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact. See item 6 below for description of similar CAPTA provision.

Conference agreement

As explained above, the Child Protection Block Grant includes a capped entitlement component for States. Each eligible State is entitled to receive from the Secretary an amount equal to the State share of the child Protection Grant amount which increases from $2.047 billion in 1997 to $2.766 billion in 2002.

The Child Protection Block Grant also includes funds from the discretionary program outlined below. In addition to the Block Grant, each eligible State is entitled to receive reimbursements, on as open-ended basis, for the State share of allowable expenditures on eligible children placed in qualified foster care and adoption.

Child protection grant amount

Present law

Federal funds for child welfare and child protection activities consist both of direct spending under Titles IV–B and IV–E of the Social Security Act, and appropriated funds under Title IV–B of the Social Security Act and selected additional programs, including the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act. (For additional programs, see Item 1.A. of this document, above.)

House bill

The Child Protection Grant amount is composed of both a direct spending component and an appropriated component as follows: $3.930 billion in 1996, $4.195 billion in 1997, $4.507 billion in 1998, $4.767 billion in 1999, and $5.071 billion in 2000 in direct spending; and $486 million in each year 1996–2000 in appropriated spending.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact. The amendment authorizes a total of $263 million for FY1996 and such sums as necessary for FY1997 through FY2000 for State grants, State demonstration projects, discretionary activities, and community-based family resources and support grants under CAPTA; adoption opportunities grants; and abandoned infants assistance grants.

Conference agreement

The discretionary component of the block grant includes a $325 million authorization for each year 1997–2002.

State share

Present law

No specific allocation formula governs the allocation of foster care and adoption assistance funds to States; States are reimbursed on an open-ended entitlement basis for eligible expenditures on behalf of eligible children. Independent living allocations to States are based on each State's share of Title IV–E foster children in FY1984. Family violence grants are awarded on the basis of State population. [Note: The family violence program would not be repealed by H.R. 4.] Child abuse State grants and community-based family resource grants are awarded on the basis of population under the age of 18. State allocations for child welfare services under Title IV–B are based on per capita income and population age 21 and under.

House bill

"State Share" means each State receives the same proportion of the block grant each year as it received of payments to States by the Federal government for the following selected child welfare programs in either the average of years 1992 through 1994 or in 1994, whichever is greater:

a. foster care maintenance, administration, and training;

b. adoption assistance maintenance, administration, and training;

c. title IV–E independent living award;

d. family violence and prevention services;

e. child abuse State grants;

f. child abuse community-based prevention grants; and

g. child welfare services.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact. See Item 6 below for description of similar CAPTA provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill, except the selected child welfare programs on which the State share is to be based are:

(1) foster care administration and training;

(2) adoption assistance administration and training;

(3) child welfare services;

(4) family preservation and family support; and

(5) independent living services.

Definition of State

Present law

Under Titles IV–B and IV–E of the Social Security Act, "State" means the 50 States and the District of Columbia. The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa receive funds through set-asides and under special rules.

House bill

"State" includes the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact.

Conference agreement

"State"includes the several States and the District of Columbia. The territories will carry out a child protection program in accordance with this part; entitlement funding is provided under section 1108 of the Social Security Act.

Use of grant

Present law

Funds must be used for: "protecting and promoting the welfare of children, preventing unnecessary separation of children from their families, restoring children to their families if they have been removed, family preservation services, community-based family support services to promote the well-being of children and families and to increase parents' confidence and competence." Foster care maintenance and adoption assistance payments are an open-ended entitlement to individuals.

House bill

A State to which funds are paid under this section may use such funds in any manner that the State deems appropriate to accomplish the purposes of this part.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact. CAPTA grants can be used for improving child protective services, investigating and reporting of abuse and neglect, case management and delivery of services to children and families, training for service providers and abuse reporters, demonstration projects, kinship care arrangements, abuse and neglect prevention, and similar activities.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill. A State to which funds are paid under this section may use such funds in any manner that the State deems appropriate to accomplish the purposes of this part.

Transfer of funds

Present law

No provision.

House bill

In FY1998 and succeeding years, States may transfer up to 30 percent of funds paid under this section for activities under any or all of the following: the temporary assistance for needy families block grant; the social services block grant under Title XX of the Social Security Act; the child care and development block grant; and any food and nutrition or employment and training grants enacted during the 104th Congress. Rules of the recipient program will apply to the transferred funds. Funds may be transferred into the Child Protection Block Grant from other block grants and are then subject to the rules of this part.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree that no funds can be transferred out of the block grant.

Timing of expenditures

Present law

Provisions vary under programs to be replaced. Under Title IV–E, States have up to two fiscal years in which to claim reimbursement for expenditures.

House bill

A State to which funds are paid under this section for a fiscal year shall expend such funds not later than the end of the immediately succeeding fiscal year.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Rule of interpretation

Present law

For-profit foster care providers are not eligible for Federal funding under Title IV–E.

House bill

Nothing in this act shall preclude for-profit short- and long-term foster care facilities from being eligible to receive funds from this block grant.

Senate amendment

No provision.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Timing of payments

Present law

Under Title IV–B, the Secretary makes payments to States periodically. Under Title IV–E, the Secretary reimburses States for expenditures on a quarterly basis.

House bill

The Secretary must make payments on a quarterly basis.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Penalties

Present law

States that do not comply with Section 427 child protections may not receive their share of Title IV–B appropriations above $141 million. However, effective April 1, 1996, these protections are to become State plan requirements and the incentive funding mechanism will no longer be in effect. Section 1123 of the Social Security Act requires the Secretary to establish by regulation a new Federal review system for child welfare, which would allow penalties for misuse of funds.

House bill

The Secretary must reduce amounts otherwise payable to a State by any amount which an audit conducted under the Single Audit Act finds has been used in violation of this part. The Secretary, however, shall not reduce any quarterly payment by more than 25 percent. The amount of misspent funds will be withheld from the State's payments during the following year, if necessary, to recover the full amount of the penalty.

If an audit conducted pursuant to the Single Audit Act finds that a State has reduced its level of expenditures in FY 1996 or 1997 below its level of non-Federal expenditures in FY 1995 under Title IV–B or Title IV–E, the Secretary must reduce subsequent amounts otherwise payable to the State by an amount equal to the difference between State spending in FY 1995 and the current year.

The Secretary must reduce by 3 percent the amount otherwise payable to a State for a fiscal year if the State has not submitted a report required (see item 7 below) for the immediately preceding fiscal year within 6 months after the end of the year. The penalty may be rescinded if the report is submitted within 12 months after the end of the year.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact.

Conference agreement

Conferees agree to maintain the detailed child protections now found in section 427 of the Social Security Act. Conferees also agree that an additional penalty equal to 5 percent of a State's block grant amount will be imposed in cases where the Secretary finds that funds have been spent in violation of the part, or where a State has failed to meet its maintenance-of-effort requirement. States will be required to maintain 100 percent of their FY 1994 non-Federal expenditure level in FY 1997 and 1998, and 75 percent of such expenditures in subsequent years.

The agreement provides that the Secretary may not impose a penalty if she determines that the State has reasonable cause for failing to comply with the requirement. Further, a State must be informed before any penalty is imposed and be given an opportunity to enter into a corrective compliance plan. The agreement provides a series of deadlines for submission of such corrective compliance plans and review by the Federal government.

Limitation on Federal authority

Present law

See above.

House bill

Except as expressly provided in this part, the Secretary may not regulate the conduct of States under this part or enforce any provision of this part.

Senate amendment

No directly comparable provision in Titles IV–B or IV–E. Current law would remain intact.

Conference agreement

The conference agreement follows the House bill with a modification to refer to authority expressly provided in the Social Security Act

D. Child Protection Standards

Present law
